

Gracious Tribute To Grateful Ally

Ottawa, Feb. 10 — Unforgotten achievements of the Canadian Forces in the great war, and the undying gratitude of the French people for the spirit that prompted their service and sacrifice, were recalled in fitting manner last Friday in the House of Commons when a resolution was carried, unanimously, accepting from France her gift of an area on the bloodstained ridge of Vimy, to be in perpetuity "a bit of Canada."

Right Hon. Mackenzie King, in moving the resolution, explained that its purpose was to accept the donation by the Republic of 250 acres on Vimy Ridge, and to express in formal terms the deep appreciation of the Canadian people and their Parliament.

PLEDGE TO ETERNAL FRIENDSHIP

It was fitting, said the Prime Minister, that one so closely identified with exploits of the Canadian Corps as Lord Byng should be the one now to announce to Canada the generosity of France, and that one possessing the rare qualities of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux should have had so much to do with the necessary negotiations. The proposed Allard memorial, he said, would be in keeping with the glorious traditions of Vimy Ridge, where first had fought, as a magnificent battle-unit, the men of Canada, and which now stood, above all other spots, "one of the world's great altars of sacrifice," a pledge to the eternal friendship of two great nations.

That France had declined to sell the park, preferring to donate it to Canada, was cause for deep feeling, said Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who referred to recent differences of opinion between France and Britain as purely intellectual. The heart of Britain remained true, and joined in that alliance of honor, Canada stood firmly with France.

The Progressive Leader, Robert Forke, added a few sincere words of commendation of the memorial idea, and was honored to feel that, in erecting that memorial to Canadian men and boys, France sought to play a noble part.

FRANCE DOES NOT FORGET

Hon. W. S. Fielding told of a personal instance by which, on his recent trip, he had learned more truly how much the people of France thought of Canada, and Hon Ernest Lapointe, in fluent and eloquent French, added the tribute of that newer France from which had gone, in common with those of other Provinces, young men whose lives had been gladly laid down in the cause of right and truth.

As a soldier, Hon. R. J. Manion expressed his pleasure at the gift and the idea of a memorial on Vimy and at the fact that the Speaker had been the one chiefly responsible for the negotiations with La Belle Republique. J. L. Brown (Lisgar) and J. G. Rohichaud (Gloucester) added brief expressions of sympathy and appreciation, and with the adoption of the resolution a glorious page was added to the chapter of French and Canadian relations.

An address of welcome was given by Rev Peter Matheson on behalf of the members of L.O.L. 2813. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: W.C.M., J. A. Stewart; D.C.M., Thomas McLeod; Chaplain, Rev Peter Matheson; Recording Secretary, N. J. McIntosh; Financial Secretary, Robert Hay; Treasurer, Wm. Proceedings of Ontario Legislature

Toronto, Feb. 13th, 1923.—Despite urban criticism of Hon. Manning Doherty's immigration policy designed especially to assist farming conditions in Ontario, the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario has no intention whatever of changing his present laid plans, which have been approved and accepted by the overseas authorities.

Replying in the Legislature Monday afternoon to some comments made by Messrs K. K. Homuth, and G. G. Halcrow, labor members for the constituencies of S. Wellington and E. Hamilton, Hon. Mr. Doherty said: "We have been receiving applications for help on farms averaging for the last several weeks about 30 a day that we have been absolutely unable to fill. It has come to the point when if we are to secure labor for the farms of this country 'it is necessary for us to bring into this country people who are prepared to do farm labor.'"

"I may say for the information of the House that I have no intention whatever of abandoning the policy on which the Colonization Department of this Government has started, of bringing in experienced farm laborers—not until the demand for farm labor in this Province is satisfied."

In previous discussion, Mr. Halcrow had referred rather sarcastically to the average remuneration of $8.26 per week and board offered by farmers for farm help, and, dealing with city unemployment conditions, had asked how married men could be expected to take up farm work under these conditions. In that connection, Hon. Mr. Doherty said:—

"The wages being offered today by the farmers of the Province vary from $25 to $40 a month with keep, a very fair and average wage for the farmer. In fact if the farmers of the Province were not overly pressed for help with the prices they are realizing at the present for their products, they would not be offering wages for that standard."

Other members participated in the brief discussion of the unemployment conditions in Ontario and their particular relation to the farm help situation, notably Sam. Clarke, Liberal member for Northumberland, K. K. Homuth had introduced the matter by protesting at a reported utterance of the Navy League President, Sam. Harris, in Liverpool, to the effect that only those were employed in Ontario who would not work. Hon. Mr. Doherty afterwards stated that he thought Mr. Harris had put the thing very fairly.

Mr. Clarke, who comes from a rural constituency, regretted the tendency among rural people to accept at their surface values glowing reports of the success of this or that farm land who had left the country to go to the city for five or six or seven dollars a day. His advice to the man on the farm was to stay on the farm—that a farmage with board, with no attendant worries, was infinitely better than the larger wages paid in urban centers which were completely eaten up by house rental and living costs.

The Government will have an able exponent in to-day's (Tuesday's) debate, when Edgar Watson U.F.O. member for North Victoria takes the floor. Mr. Watson has acted as chairman of various important house committees, and, indeed, has been rather subjected to criticism for his activities. To-day he will reply to his critics and undoubtedly, at the same time, ably champion the Government's administrative record.

K. of C. to Aid Veterans

Toronto, February 10.—The sum of $23,000 now in the hands of the executive committee of the Knights of Columbus of Canada, being the residue of the "army hut" funds during the war, will be used in connection with hospital work of veterans whose illness is of such a nature as to put them outside the statutes under which assistance and pensions are granted. This action was decided upon today at a meeting here of the executive head of the organization from various parts of the Dominion. Hon. G. H. Boivin, deputy Speaker in the House of Commons and a supreme director of the Knights of Columbus, was one of those present at the gathering.

Eastern Ontario Liberals to Meet

The Advisory Committee of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association will hold a meeting at Ottawa on March 1, when one of the principal items of business will be to discuss the question of making a survey of conditions in each riding, in anticipation of the forthcoming Provincial elections. During the morning joint Chairmen of the Advisory Council and Executive Committees will be chosen, and sub-committees appointed to aid in carrying on the work. Important business will be discussed at the afternoon session, and in the evening several prominent Liberals will address a meeting in the Chateau Laurier.

The Ingleneuk

(By G. Watt Smith M.A.)
A WOMAN FULL OF GOOD WORKS AND ALMS DEEDS.

This is the biography of a woman who belonged to the earliest days of the Christian faith. She lived in an obscure town, by the seaside and had no other reputation than this. Biography is the most difficult kind of literary work. It is easy to become fulsome in praise of the subject, and just as easy to miss out some of the most salient features of character. The Holy scriptures are not a biography but they contain biographies; when they give us the stories of lives they take the items which are of abiding meaning, either of good or ill, and sift down the character of its subjects to the elements. Here is a woman whose biography is summed up in one sentence, but what a sentence it is, and what a monument of honour it erects in the gallery of the great of those days.

We should never forget that woman did not occupy the place of honour in Jewish society, or among any of the Semetic peoples, which she occupies in our modern civilization. The Christian gospel gave woman her place. She was enfranchised by the Redeemer of the world. She paid her first tribute of recognition of gratitude and appreciation to Him who gave this new status to her when she stood in the shadow of His cross when all the men who had been his vowed followers had forsaken Him and fled.

This woman of Joppa has come into the secret of the Christian faith at its very beginning. It inspires good deeds, even to the undeserving. It is only by such deeds that the heart can find an adequate expression. When we find ourselves under a load of debt which we cannot by any means pay we are crushed under the sense of our incompetence. When we can find utterance for our gratitude it affords a relief in the very expression of thankfulness. The gratitude which finds such expression is not concerned for any return for deeds done from this motive. It rises to the level of a sacrifice on the altar, which is quite content to have the gift consumed in smoke if it is but placed before God. It seeks no fame; it courts no applause; it looks for no monument on which deeds are inscribed. It spends itself in the deeds and is only remembered for what has been done.

Among the multitude of graves in France there are many very touching expressions, of love and faith, on the headstones. But the most pathetic inscription of all is the French "inconnu" or the Anglo-Saxon "Unknown". At Passchendaele there lies an officer who won the Victoria Cross, but his body is nameless; he is only remembered by what he has done.

This is truly the highest standard of piety, a life of good deeds, from the purest motives of simple faith in a good God.

Little Tea in the World's Tea Centre

London, England, for generations the tea market of the world is faced with a most serious tea shortage. Recently the world consumption has greatly increased, also, it is estimated there has been 80,000,000 lbs. less tea produced this year than is ordinarily consumed. As a result of this, the stocks in London are now practically exhausted. Prices are at the highest level ever reached and may still go higher.

United Dairymen Co-operative Limited Shareholders Meet

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Glengarry Local of United Dairymen Co-operative, Limited, was held in the office of the Department of Agriculture, on Tuesday of last week. The County President, Mr. D. W. Hope of Summers-town, presided.

The Provincial Secretary, Mr. H. B. Cowan of Peterboro, was present and submitted the financial statements covering the operations of the company for the year ending November 30, 1922. It showed that the sales of the company last year amounted to nearly $1,400,000, the total sales since the company was organized in 1920 having been $3,778,000. The Company sold cheese last year for about 150 factories. This year it intends to develop new sales centres at Belleville for Central Ontario and Ingersoll for Western Ontario, and to probably double its volume of business.

The financial statement showed that the company had earned substantial profits out of which the directors recommended the payment of the third annual dividend of eight per cent, and the writing off of surplus profits of a considerable sum from the organization expense account. The reports were considered satisfactory.

Because of the cold weather and the influenza epidemic, the attendance was not large and for this reason the election of officers was deferred until another meeting can be held later.

Hockey at Ironsides

The following account of a strenuous and exciting game of hockey played at Ironside College, Que., recently, will be of interest to our readers and friends of Glengarry students:

St. Alexander's College added another to its list of victories when the local sextette took the measure of the Ottawa Health Department by a score of 3 to 1. As usual Trotter was the best on the ice while the student's as a whole turned in a good game. Lachaine saved the visitors from a worse beating.

Shortly after play opened Willie worked in and Trotter scored from his rebound. Before the end of the period St. Jean tallied on a long shot for the visitors.

In the third period Trotter registered the second counter for the students and Goulet repeated on an end to end rush. During the last minutes the college made it hot for their opponents and Lachaine saved from every angle.

Herve Drouin handled the game in a satisfactory manner.

Our Post Office

The Mayor, J. E. Chevier and F. T. Costello interviewed Dr. King, the Minister of Public Works, on Tuesday, about the rebuilding of the Public Building here which was burned in March, 1921. Dr. King assured them that the Government recognized that it is a matter of replacement that must be done. He will place it in the supplementary estimates to be submitted to the Finance Department before coming up in the House. If the Government are making similar replacements in Ontario this year it will be in the estimates submitted to the House.

Send in List of Officers

The Glengarry News will be pleased to receive the results of the installation of officers in Lodges and other Fraternal Societies throughout the district for the current year. Recording Secretaries are asked to compile the list of officers and they will be given a place in our paper. This request applies to Women's Organizations as well.

Early Days at Old Niagara

(Toronto Globe)
Early families and events at Niagara are recalled by the death at St. Catharines of Johnson Clench, County Clerk of Lincoln for the past sixty years.

Mr. Clench succeeded his uncle as Clerk, and the office had been held by the family for ninety-five years. The Clench family has been prominent in the Niagara Peninsula from the earliest settlement, Col. Rafe Clench being elected Town Clerk there as early as 1793, and holding the office for some years, being later Clerk of the Peace, Judge Registrar of Surrogate, Colonel of Militia, and several times member of the House of Assembly. He was born at Schenectady, and died at Niagara in 1828, at the age of 68. At first he was buried in Butler's private graveyard at Niagara, but afterward his body was removed to the cemetery of St. Mark's Church, which precious piece of Canadian ground excited this comment from Dean Stanley on his visit: "This is a piece of old England; do not allow it to be altered."

During the American occupation of Niagara for several months in 1813 Col. Clench's house escaped destruction, but it was accidentally burned shortly afterward.

Col. Clench's wife, Elizabeth Johnson, was a granddaughter of Sir William Johnson and Molly Brant. Molly, the Indian Princess, was a sister of Joseph Brant, and was Johnson's second wife. They had eight children. Johnson was a British leader in several engagements against the French in the campaign which resulted in the capture of Canada in 1759, and possessed great influence with the Six Nations. His marriage to Molly Brant had taken place about 1748.

The close relationship with the aborigines in the early days of Upper Canada is shown by a description of a dance at Niagara in June, 1793, quoted by Miss Carnochan in her "History of Niagara."

The music and dancing was good, everything was conducted with propriety. What excited the best feelings of the heart was the ease and affection with which the ladies met each other, although there were a number present whose mothers sprang from the aborigines of the country. They appeared as well dressed as the company in general, and intermixed with them in a manner which evinced at once the dignity of their own minds and the good sense of others. These ladies possessed great ingenuity and industry, and deserve great merit for the education they have received, owing principally to their own industry, as their father, Sir William Johnson, was dead. Their mother was the noted Mohawk Princess, Molly Brant, sister of Capt. Joseph Brant.

New Interests in Montreal

We understand the Messrs Markson of this place, within the past few days have closed a business deal of some importance and magnitude in Montreal. They purpose, in an extensive way, going into the wood and coal business which gives promise of good results. This may call for the permanent residence in Montreal, of Mr. Dave Markson who for several years now has conducted so successfully their Mercantile establishment here. His removal to the Metropolis will be regretted by many.

In addition a five reel production "Down on the Farm" will be shown. Two shows in one for the price of one. Admission 15 and 40 cents. See page 8 for further particulars.

Cheese Boards Done Says Hon. Mr. Doherty

(Contributed)

The Hon. Manning Doherty, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, is rapidly earning for himself an unenviable reputation among the politicians of Canada. His past promises to the Ontario farmers have usually been taken as political clap-trap and little or no attention was paid to his highly extravagant utterances. But when he predicted that passing of the cheese boards and handling of all the produce through the co-operative association he is fathering, he has beyond doubt, reached the height of absurdity. The cheese boards are an essential part of the organization for the marketing of cheese, and no matter what the Hon. Manning Doherty predicts, with his usual egotistical complacency, he will prove a colossal failure when he attempts to change the current of the produce which has been flowing in the same direction for years. Some of his utterances are quite true, such as when he said:

"As far as the quality of butter is concerned, Ontario stands absolutely at the bottom of the list among the Provinces". Here is something he can remedy if he dares dictate to the farmer. These boards give a healthy competition to the trade in the price of this commodity, without which it would die of inertia. Mr. Doherty's idea evidently is to do away with competition and keep the Ontario trade for himself. The old saying that "competition is the life of trade" is true, with all due respect to this wonderful prediction we will venture to say that the cheese boards will function long after Mr. Doherty's co-operative association has ceased to exist.

Probably the United States have spent more on the theory of co-operative marketing than any other country and with greater financial disaster. The United States Department of Agriculture have compiled a list of co-operative associations which have ceased to function since 1913. This covers ample time to give any concern a good chance to prove the soundness of the co-operative.

General Wolfe

(By the HON. F. C. WADE, K. C.)
Agent-General for British Columbia, (in the London Morning Post).

One hundred and fifty-six years ago today, (Jan. 2), James Wolfe was born at the Vicarage of Westerham. To realize the debt we owe to Wolfe it is only necessary to glance for a moment at some of the incidents of the Seven Years' War. Let us look first at the characters in the drama. On the side of Prussia, Frederick the Great, with the army which had been bequeathed by his father, "the best engine of war in Europe," and he himself the first warrior of his time, if not of all time. On the side of France, Louis and the Marshal Saxe, and on the American continent, the Marquis de Montcalm, the Chevalier de Levis, the Chevalier de Bourlamaque, Baron Dieskau, Bougainville and others. Of England, the Duke of Cumberland, the victor at Culloden, and in statesmanship, Fox, Carteret, the two Townshends, Mansfield, Halifax, but above and beyond all, the great commoner, William Pitt, dearly loved England, and himself described as "England incarnate"; on the American continent on the British side, Brigadier Lord Howe, Braddock, Major-General Amherst, and under him the three brigadiers, Whitmore, Lawrence and Wolfe, and in the Colonial forces, with Braddock at Monongehela, and as his aid-de-camp in the expedition against Fort Duquesne, Adjutant-General George Washington of the Virginia militia, Shirley, and Robert Rogers, with his famous rangers.

WORLD'S FATE CHANGED

With each combatant in the field, results were to be expected. "That," said Earl Granville on his deathbed, "has been the most glorious war and the most triumphant peace that England ever knew." "The Peace of Paris," says Parkman, "marks an epoch than which none in modern history is so fruitful of grander results." "It is no exaggeration to say," writes Green, "that three of the many victories of the Seven Years' War determined for ages to come the destinies of mankind. With that of Rossbach began the re-creation of Germany; with that of Plassey, the influence of Europe told for the first time since the days of Alexander on the nations of the East; with the triumph of Wolfe on the Heights of Abraham began the history of the United States"—and he might have added, of British America.

If Napoleon had succeeded at the Battle of Trafalgar it has been said, "the fate of the world would have been changed, Toronto and Cape Town, Melbourne and Sydney and Auckland might have been ruled by French prefects." Had no Wolfe succeeded at Quebec there would have been no North America for Nelson to save. What do we not owe to Wolfe? What does not the United States owe? Had Wolfe not broken the French power the British colonists would have been overwhelmed in any attempt to break through the barriers that herded them between the mountains and the sea. Had not the French menace been removed it would have been folly on their part to throw off their British allegiance, only to risk falling under French control. Wolfe's victory paved the way. But for that great event the Declaration of Independence might never have been written. It certainly would have been postponed.

REMAINS TAKEN TO ENGLAND

Had Wolfe been buried in Canadian soil no doubt his grave would long ere this have been suitably honored by Canada, the young but giant nation for which his victory paved the way on this continent. But after the battle of the Plains of Abraham Wolfe's body was sent to England. In one of the last days of October the cannon on the ramparts of Quebec answered the salute of the fleet which had set sail for England. On board the Royal William was the embalmed body of General Wolfe. On Saturday, November 17, 1759, the following entry appears in The Gentleman's Magazine, Vol. XXIX: "This day the remains of General Wolfe were landed at Portsmouth from on board the Royal William man-of-war, during the solemnity minute guns were fired from the ships at Spithead, and all the honours that could be paid to the memory of a gallant officer were paid on this occasion." (p. 548.) On Tuesday, November 20, this entry appears: "The corpse of General Wolfe was interred in a private manner in the family vault at Greenwich." The entries in the burial register of the parish church at St. Alfege at Greenwich for November, 1759, include many of the very poor, a founding, a "found drowned," and the illustrious general.

The potter's child, the poor, the founding, the found drowned, and the illustrious general who secured the greatest of continents for the Anglo-Saxon race, pass off the stage, their exits recorded without distinction. The "Elegy" had been written but eight years before the fall of Quebec, and Wolfe loved its mellow music and sweet but said philosophy. How strikingly is the teaching of the "Elegy" enforced by a page from the register of St. Alfege!

"Let not ambition mock their useful toil.

Their humble joys and destiny obscure.

Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile

The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,

And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave

Await alike the inevitable hour;

The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

MINUTE GUNS at PORTSMOUTH

The words of Parkman and the Abbe Casgrain tell us little or nothing of the ceremonies which took place on the arrival of the remains of General Wolfe in England. A pretty full record is contained in the Annual Register for 1759, Vol. 2, commencing page 282. The story is reproduced in W. A. Russell's History of England, 1783:

"1759. The remains of that gallant hero General Wolfe were deposited in the country for the defence of which he had lost his life.

"On Sunday, November 17th, at seven o'clock in the morning, H.M.S. Royal William (in which his corpse was brought from Quebec to Portsmouth) fired two signal guns

How Clothing and Furnishing sales are increased by Long Distance

Some quotations from recent reports:

"Long Distance brought us so much business that we expect to enlarge our factory."

"Tried Station-to-Station service and find it very satisfactory for selling goods to distant points."

"Thanks to Long Distance we are able to carry on without a large stock of goods. We call up wholesalers for our needs."

"We call up customers in outside towns and make appointments for try-ons."

A well-known firm of Ottawa retailers writes "We often use Long Distance in preference to writing."

Charlie Gets His Thrill

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS

Charlie Fisher had always said that nothing exciting would ever happen to him. He'd always declared that his life would be just like his experience in the war—one of the first to be drafted, and all during the service kept at a desk job in America until long after the boys who saw actual fighting were mustered out and back home again.

"That's the way my life is going to be," Charlie told some of his pals one evening after a poker game in which Charlie, as nearly always, had come out practically even. "My life is going to be humdrum and monotonous. There won't be anything wonderful or exciting in it. No matter what thing I tackle that looks like action, it always goes to sleep when I come along. It's tough, I tell you, fellows, it's tough."

"Huh!" ejaculated one of the others, "when your luck does change it sure will change for fair. You'll get all the excitement you want by and by. You watch."

"Nix, not me!" exclaimed Charlie, and he went from the room out into the night to find his small car and go home to his quiet couch.

But Charlie's car was missing. And, right there Charlie's luck changed.

At first Charlie thought he must be dreaming. His car was one of the prehistoric models, which should be placed in museums, and it didn't seem possible that any human being would care to steal it.

At first Charlie thought he might have forgotten where he'd parked it. But after thinking it over carefully he knew exactly where he'd left the machine, and he knew conclusively, after rubbing his eyes a couple of times and walking around the block, that his machine was really gone.

Now, while no one likes to have a machine stolen, the fact of the matter was that Charlie's loss was not so very great, owing to the ancient nature of his equipage. So, after making one or more futile efforts to find the car, Charlie shrugged his shoulders and started to walk home whistling.

Two blocks on the way toward home Charlie stopped short, and rubbed his eyes. There, parked along the curbing a half block in front of him, was his unmistakable old bus. Of course Charlie felt rejoiced and hurried up to the machine.

The bus looked much as he'd left it. The side curtains were still on and there was just about as much mud on it as ever. But something was different about it, as Charlie felt a thrill upon coming close to it. Just what was the difference, anyhow?

Charlie couldn't for the life of him tell where the difference was, but the difference was there, just the same. But what was the use of puzzling over it?

So he opened the front door, pushed aside the curtain and started to enter. But he stopped short.

Seated at the wheel of the car and smiling at him was a beautiful girl!

Charlie gasped even as he took in the girl's great beauty and winsomeness. And as he looked she spoke, in a voice that thrilled Charlie immensely.

"I've been hoping that you'd come," said the girl. "Please get in—there's something I want you to do for me."

"Scarcely believing that he wasn't dreaming Charlie nevertheless got in as directed and closed the door behind him and placed the curtains in position.

"Shall I drive?" queried Charlie.

"No, I'll drive," replied the girl. "It will be easier to drive you to the place I want to take you to than it will be to explain to you how to get there."

"Perhaps it would be easier and quicker for me to drive, after all," murmured Charlie. "This car is apt to cut up at times and then it takes a person who knows her thoroughly to make her go."

"I'll take a chance," said the girl. Having said this, she started the car with the starter which had been added by Charlie a year before to the car's ancient equipment. After warming up the car for a moment or so the girl sent the machine at a rapid pace through the dark, deserted streets and out on a boulevard which led into the city.

"I'd like to explain everything to you right away," said the girl, "but I don't dare to. I think you're the man to help me, though. I've heard a lot about you, and I know you're brave. By the way," she broke off sharply, "is any one following us?"

Charlie glanced around quickly. Some distance back on the boulevard he saw a large closed car without lights coming after them.

"I don't know whether that bird is following us or not, but there's a car behind us without lights."

"They're following us," exclaimed the girl, with a note of terror in her voice as she put on more speed. "Oh, dear, I thought I was going to be so brave, and I'm frightened—horribly frightened!"

Charlie felt a sudden wild desire to fold this beautiful girl in his arms and comfort her as best he could. Never before had he felt this way about a girl. What was coming over him, anyhow?

"You're not afraid of a fight, are you?" queried the girl.

"I should say not!" cried Charlie, feeling strong enough at this moment to whip a regiment if in doing so he would win this charming girl's approbation.

"There'll be a fight," said the girl positively.

For a moment there was silence. Then Charlie spoke up.

"This is all very interesting and exciting," Charlie said. "But you haven't told me your name or where I can see you after this thing is over."

The girl gave him a swift, sidelong glance.

"I'm afraid you'll never want to see me again after this is over," she said rather pathetically.

"Yes, I will," declared Charlie emphatically.

"No matter what happens?"

"Yes."

For a moment the girl looked at him as though appraising him. This inspection seemed to be satisfactory, for she smiled at the end of it.

"My name is Grace," she said. "And if you've got a paper and pencil I'll give you my phone number."

Charlie felt a real thrill as he took down the telephone number. Was the girl telling him the truth? Would he ever see her again? He devoutly hoped that he would.

For some little time they raced out into the country. Abruptly the girl turned into a side road and a moment later stopped before a deserted looking house.

"This is the place," said the girl.

"What next?" smiled Charlie.

"I—I don't know," said the girl. "Oh, I wish I was out of it. I—"

She turned to Charlie with a queer look in her eyes. What was she thinking of? What was behind this queer adventure?

Charlie had slight time to speculate on these questions. Almost on the instant the car was surrounded by ten or a dozen silent, black-masked men. A burly individual, who seemed to be the leader, beckoned to Charlie to step out. Charlie looked at the girl. Her face was averted. For a moment he hesitated and fear caught at his heart. Then the burly leader caught at him and pulled him from the car.

Once Charlie was out of the car he was immediately blindfolded, bound and gagged. Then he was pushed forward.

Some one struck him in the face. Charlie lurched forward, angry and puzzled. Some one hit him in the back. Now thoroughly aroused Charlie began fighting roughly. No one fought back. Silence still prevailed. Then some one tripped him. Charlie fell, saw a million stars and went into unconsciousness.

When Charlie finally came to himself he found his bonds were less tight than he had expected. He managed to get them off and remove the blindfold and gag. He was lying on the ground in front of the deserted house. No one was visible.

Slowly and painfully Charlie got to his feet and started walking toward town. Through his mind just one question seethed and tortured him. Had the girl told him the truth, or would he never see her again?

Some days later a bunch of Charlie's friends gave him a dinner on the occasion of his birthday. The toastmaster was Ed Cunningham, a burly individual.

"Here's to Charlie," said Ed, when it came time for the toasts. "He wanted excitement and we gave it to him. Charlie, your luck hasn't turned yet. The gang that gagged you and roped you and blindfolded you was this bunch. There isn't any excitement in life for you yet. The mysterious girl was only my sister Grace."

Charlie rose slowly to his feet while the crowd laughed and cheered. Charlie's face was flushed, his eyes sparkling.

"I'm not kicking at what you fellows did," he said. "I simply want to say my luck has changed. I've never been so excited in my life as I have been recently. I've never been so thrilled as I am today."

This statement seemed to surprise the crowd. For a moment there was silence.

"How's that, Charlie?" queried Cunningham. "Tell us about it."

"It's simply this," Charlie responded. "I've fallen in love and today the girl promised to marry me!"

"Who's the girl?" cried the crowd.

"It's Grace—Ed Cunningham's sister," said Charlie and smiled.

AMERICAN FUNNY MEN CLEAN

Best Known of the Country's Humorists Have Never Had to Resort to Vulgarity.

American humor differs from the fun of other countries in a variety of ways without losing anything in the comparison. There have been many men of letters in this country who have achieved fame and fortune as "funny men," and it is pleasant to remember that practically all of them have won their laurels through a humor that aims to entertain and instruct, without leaving anything in the form of a scar.

In humor's hall of fame its Americans know it are such names as Mark Twain, Bill Nye, James Whitcomb Riley, Artemus Ward, Eli Perkins, Robert Burdette and a long list of others, few of whom ever found it necessary to throw any verbal bricks or resort to vulgarity to gain the followings which they enjoyed. Recent years have developed successors to the delightful jokers of other days, but the standard, and in a measure the form of expression, is loyally retained.

American humor frequently gains its point through inference rather than

Here and There

St. John, N.B.—J. M. Woodman, general superintendent of the C. P. R., New Brunswick district, announced that the only large expenditure in his district during the year will be for ballasting and bridges. Mr. Woodman returned from Montreal, where he was on a business trip.

Edmonton.—The northern railway extensions, which under the recently announced agreement with the Union Bank will be proceeded with next spring, are to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Construction Department. One of the conditions of the agreement between the provincial government and the bank interests is that the C. P. R. do the construction work, it is stated by Premier Greenfield, and the conditions will be complied with by the government, which had originally intended building the roads under its own railway department.

Port Arthur.—Additional trackage accommodation will be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway in its Port Arthur yards this coming summer, especially at Current River, to take care of the increasing grain trade to be created by the elevators there. Other work will also be done locally and at Fort William considerable will be undertaken, including the replacement of the two large freight sheds destroyed recently by fire, with buildings of an improved and fireproof type.

Carleton Place, Ont.—On the occasion of the retirement of roadmaster Jelly and section foreman J. Millikin from the C. P. R. Company's service, the fellow employees and their wives gathered at the town hall, Saturday, and a social evening was spent. The tables were laden with the very best that a caterer from Ottawa could provide, and about 150 people were present from all classes of the company's service.

St. John, N.B.—C. E. McPherson, Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with headquarters at Winnipeg, was in St. John recently, the guest of his brother-in-law, Dr. W. W. White. Mr. McPherson is always a welcome visitor to St. John where he was for many years as the representative of the C. P. R. up to 1897 when he went to Toronto, and later in 1899 to Winnipeg, his headquarters since. He has watched this Western metropolis grow from a town of 40,000 to a city of 200,000.

Yorkton.—Another milestone in the history of railway development in Yorkton and district was marked when the members of the clerical staff of the C. P. R. freight department took up their quarters in the offices of the new freight shed. This building is 240 feet long and 40 feet wide, and provides accommodation for eighteen cars of freight. The building and track alterations involved an expenditure of nearly $70,000.

Winnipeg.—Great interest in the increasing of facilities for the storing and handling of grain at the head of the lakes was reported by Charles Murphy, general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who returned from Fort William. Mr. Murphy stated there would be an enlargement of at least 4,000,000 bushels in the storage capacity during the coming summer, and it was hoped the new equipment would be in working order in time to take care of the next crop. Two privately owned elevators were to be erected and the buildings of the Saskatchewan co-operative company to be enlarged he stated. One construction outfit was already on the ground and construction would be rushed as soon as weather conditions permitted.

UNPAID FARM HELPERS

Birds Work Well for Man Practically Without Wages.

Do Splendid Work in Field and Orchard—Meadow Larks and Robins Real Friends of Farmers—Redbreast Devours Many Cut-worms—Farmer's Wife Should Be a Co-partner.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

When we employ a man and put him to work in the fields destroying the weeds and insects that are injurious to crop production, we are obliged to pay for the service with the coin of the realm. If the weeds and insects were not controlled, crop production would be greatly hampered. We willingly pay the human labor to cultivate and protect the crops, while at the same time giving little thought to the great service rendered by birds as farm help—yes, unpaid farm help. Weeds grow from weed seeds. Destroy the weed seed and we could in time get rid of this agricultural pest. Insects that feed on farm crops come from the eggs of moths, flies, beetles and butterflies; destroy these early in the year and prevent the swarms of young crawlers gaining life and menacing the crops.

The Bird Is the Unpaid Farm Help.

A meadow lark will eat each day weed seeds and insects in quantity greater than its own body weight. Four ounces of weed seeds or young grasshoppers each day on an average for the year would mean the destruction of over 80 pounds in a year. Twenty meadow larks on the farm would consume a ton of weed seed during the year. A ton of weed seed gathered from the fields may seem like delivering a large order, but a little flock of meadow larks will do it. Are such birds worth protecting? If you saw a little meadow lark perched beside a hundred pound sack of weed seeds, the gathering of which represented his year's work, don't you think your heart would soften and you would spare the bird's life? The normal man who appreciates a good friend will not injure nor will he permit any one else to injure the insect and weed destroying birds of our meadow lands.

The Robin No Mere Fruit Thief.

Is the robin a cherry thief? No, this bird has a perfect right to satisfy his hunger by consuming a few cherries in season in the orchard where he works as an insect destroyer for six months of the year without any wage contract. The few cherries and other domestic fruits that robins take during June and July make up less than one-third of their food for that short period. During all the rest of the season, from March to October, the robin feeds largely on insects that infest the orchard and garden. If it were not for the good work of the robin, many attempts at vegetable production would fail. Vegetable gardens and small fruit plantations are largely at the mercy of the cut-worm.

Redbreast a Great Devourer of Cut-worms.

The robin is the best cut-worm hunter that we have. His daily capacity when the hunting is good and there are hungry nestlings to feed, is not less than 300 cut-worms per day. Any bird that will destroy 300 cut-worms each day during the season when the garden vegetables are getting started is certainly worthy of the respect of all people. The taking of a few cherries or an odd strawberry by the robin is just to change the taste in his mouth after consuming so many wiggly worms. Be broad-minded, and protect the robin. Only the meanest of narrow-minded people will destroy such a useful bird.

Protecting Fruit From Birds.

If every single cherry must be reserved for sale, and robins abound, cover the tree with wire netting or old fish net or else put up a cherry cack or old auto-horn in the tree. The period of cherry raiding is short, since the birds prefer the wild fruit and will go to the fence rows as soon as they are ripe, leaving the cultivated fruit. Protect the meadow lark from the boy with a gun, and protect the robin from people who do not know any better than to destroy a useful servant. The farm birds make life possible for us all.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Farm Wife Should Be a Co-Partner.

It is only a contented, willing, thrifty and competent wife that can provide adequately for the needs of the farmer and keep the social atmosphere of the farm so wholesome and pleasant that work becomes a joy to the family and to such help as may be employed. One of the shames of farm life is that such services are accepted as a matter of course, and that little, if any, recognition is given for the important place taken by the wife and mother in making the home a fit place in which to rear a family. One of the best definitions I have heard of an ideal farm is "A home with a farm business attached." If this view were to be commonly accepted the plane of living on farms would be much higher than it now is, and the duties and influence of the home manager would be put on a par with the duties and influence of the farm manager. Then the farm business would become a partnership in fact.

Meat Consumption Figures.

The average per head consumption of meat of all kinds, exclusive of poultry and game in Great Britain, was about 120 pounds a year prior to the war. Of this amount three-fifths was home-produced, and two-fifths was imported. Of the overseas supply 70 per cent. of the mutton, 17 per cent. of the beef, and 8 per cent. of the pork came from within the Empire—Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

THE FARM FLOCK.

Sheep Pens Must Provide Shelter, But Need Not Be Warm.

Successful winter management of the farm flock is a problem worthy of the utmost consideration. Warm buildings are not necessary, but the pens must be sheltered from the elements, and, above all, dry under foot and overhead, well-ventilated, and free from drafts. Another major factor in the health of sheep during the winter months is sufficient exercise. This is essential both for the health of the flock and to ensure a strong crop of lambs the following spring. It is not a good plan to allow the flock to mangle in the yard with other stock, and therefore they should have a run of their own, preferably a yard with a southern exposure where they may be allowed their freedom on every fair day. Frequently it is advisable to feed the flock at a distance from the pen, thus ensuring sufficient exercise for the breeding stock. Divide a large flock into separate pens.

The cost of maintenance of the flock throughout this season will depend largely on their condition when taken off grass. If the ewes are in poor shape, it is very necessary to feed a liberal amount of grain in the ration in order to get them in good flesh before lambing. On the other hand, sheep can be carried throughout the winter on very little grain, provided they carry a reasonable amount of fleshing, are free from ticks and lice, and are fed roughage of good quality. It can readily be deducted that it is more economical to install the flock in their winter quarters in good flesh secured by good autumn rape or clover pasturage, than to attempt to do it throughout the winter months by grain feeding.

If the flock comes off the pasture in good condition, and the ewes are not due to lamb till March or April, the winter feeding problem is easily solved. The cheaper, bulky feeds such as alfalfa, clover, hay or well-ensiled pea-straw, or even good quality oat straw, in liberal quantities and fed in racks to eliminate unnecessary waste, may be fed twice a day, in quantities that will be cleaned up before the next feed. Timothy hay is unsatisfactory for sheep as it is constipating, and is neither nourishing nor palatable. Some succulent feed is necessary in the well-balanced sheep ration, and turnips are here recommended as they may be fed to sheep of all kinds, are very succulent, and are commonly grown on Ontario farms. Sugar beets and mangels are dangerous to rams and wethers, as they have a tendency to form stone in the bladder. Up to a bushel of turnips per day may be fed to a flock of twelve sheep, preferably pulped or sliced. Corn silage is a satisfactory substitute for roots, provided it is of good quality. The ewes must, however, be kept in good condition and a light grain ration of from two to three parts of oats to one part of bran may be fed judiciously. Oats are high in hulls, and are a safe and palatable feed for sheep at all times.

Improving Our Cheese.

The proposal of the new Co-operative Dairy Company to provide, among other things, for the manufacture of one to ten pound cheese for the home market is an exceedingly sensible one. A 60 or 80-pound cheese is as unsuitable for the best domestic trade in this commodity as is a three-bushel barrel for the most profitable domestic trade in apples.

Consumption of cheese in Canada will, however, not reach its maximum until there is a decided improvement in the quality of the product offered as well as in the form in which it is put up. The first step in the improvement of quality should be to see that no cheese is placed on store counters until the process of curing has been completed. Nothing has done so much to lessen consumption of this food product in Canada as neglect in this particular. There is as much difference between a green and well-matured cheddar, in so far as palatability is concerned, as there is between a Spy apple in early September and the same apple when at its best. Of almost equal importance in the matter of curing is the proportion of fat in the milk from which cheese is made. If the company which Hon. Manning Doberty is fathering will see that only well matured full cream cheese is offered for sale to home consumers domestic consumption per capita will soon be doubled and even trebled.

U. S. May Reduce Tariff.

The new tariff law of the United States, a Washington correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman says, gives the President power to change the rates 50 per cent. either up or down. In accordance with this provision dealers are said to contemplate an application for a reduction in the rate on butter from eight to four cents per pound, in order to facilitate the importation of supplies from New Zealand. Before this concession can be granted, however, the correspondent adds, inquiry must be made in New Zealand as to costs of production there and a comparison made with costs in the United States and this would involve sending experts abroad to get at the facts. Because of all the difficulties, expense and time involved, and the opposition sure to be aroused, the correspondent does not expect any early change in the butter tariff.

Will Pool Market Cattle.

At a meeting of the United Grain Growers' delegates, representing Western Canadian farmers, it was unanimously decided to go ahead with a co-operative cattle marketing scheme which embraces the valuing of cattle offered for sale, payment in advance on a basis of 70 per cent. of the current value, sorting of cattle to make up uniform loads, pooling receipts of cattle at the end of one week, distribution of proceeds and distribution of expenses.

Sun-Room on Wheels

Mount Robson, 13,069 Feet, Is the Highest Peak in the Canadian Rockies

Canada has some of the most magnificent mountain scenery in the world, as anyone who has travelled through the northern Canadian Rockies knows. The scenery is so varied, so full of surprises, that if the traveller gives his constant attention to one side of the car he is almost certain to be missing something very wonderful on the other side.

For years transcontinental railroads in America have tried out various types of observation cars through the mountains, the objective being to give their patrons the best possible views of the scenery. Some of them have been simply open platform cars, with no protection from the sun or inclement weather.

Car builders have been vying with one another in the construction of these cars to provide the finest observation facilities along with the maximum of comfort. At last the Canadian National Railway shops at Leaside, Toronto, have turned out a car which has all the requisites.

This car might almost be described as a sun-room on wheels, in view of the large percentage of glass used in its construction. It is regulation size, with a closed-in section 44 feet long and a spacious open compartment at each end where passengers may enjoy the open air.

The interior of the car has sixteen large windows on each side running from the seat arm rests to the ceiling. These windows are 4 ft. 5 in. high by 28 in. wide, having two panes of glass 24 in. by 24 in., one above the other. There are also two of these windows at each end of the car, one at each side of the door leading out on to the platform.

The seats are arranged transversely on each side of a centre aisle, as in an ordinary car, there being sixteen double seats on each side providing seating capacity for 64 passengers. The platforms provide capacity for 36 additional persons. The entire car side framing is of steel, with the interior finished in British Columbia cedar, stained mahogany. The interior is equipped with the most up-to-date ventilators, electric light and shades.

One of these new cars was exhibited at Toronto Exhibition last year for the first time, and 150,000 people inspected the car during the fair. It was very favorably commented upon. The car in many ways is an innovation, and marks another advance move by our National Lines.

These cars are to be used on the Mountain Division of the Canadian National Railways, and will enable travellers to view the majestic scenery on both sides of the car with the utmost ease and comfort.

Effective Method For Building Up A Substantial Business

The experience of the world's best advertisers proves that continuous advertising gets the best results. As advertising is cumulative, when there is a slip the gap is not bridged over, and when you resume advertising you have to begin all over. Periodic splashes, no matter how big a space is used, is not an effective method for building up a substantial business.

Let us prove the truth of this assertion.

The Literary Society held a Commemoration service last week, in commemoration of Miss L. Mary Smith, who had been President of the society and one of its most active members. The President, Mr. Allan McDonald occupied the chair. Portions of Scripture were read by Messrs Alec Cameron and Arthur Campbell; special pieces of music were contributed by J. Arthur McRae, Alec Cameron and J. Angus McRae. An address was given by Rev. G. Watt Smith in the course of which he said that the life of the one who had been taken from them was an embodiment of the principle of that society, which is that no member could say "let somebody else do it", but every one had to appoint to them for themselves. He related that one night recently he had been dreaming that he was training the choir to do something and could not get a somewhat difficult piece rendered. He said, "if only Mary Smith were here now she would do it". Immediately she seemed to jump before him and said "Here I am right enough". He concluded from that dream that he should say that no life in God's keeping was lost; it was transplanted to take another form. When thinking about his dream he had written a few verses.

HERE I AM.

Here I am, when there's something to do; ... Something that needs to be done; The Master that gave my sure command The one who holds her His own.

Here I am, in the limits of earth, With gifts His honour to show; It were hard not to answer His call, The joy of service to know.

Here I am, there's a call from on high; It speaks in an accent of love; No darkness can hide in threatening gloom The figure that comes from above.

Here I am, in the home of the soul, Away from peril and pain; To wait and watch the meeting of days Till we shall all meet again.

Final Notice!

While our notice to subscribers inviting them to assist the management in putting the list on a paid-in-advance basis has met with ready and prompt response by a goodly number there are still many who have apparently ignored our call which we much regret, as it would now appear that other measures will have to be adopted to secure the desired end. Subscribers, several years in arrears, may show their good intention by remitting a portion of the amount coming to us and at the same time arranging for a given period in which the balance may come forward. Having one's paper, after years of acceptance, returned to this office marked "present address unknown" or "refused" does not come within the letter of the law unless all arrears have been paid in. The press to-day have means placed at their disposal to handle such cases and the Post Office Department will not stand for any conniving. All this may be obviated, however, by a prompt payment and the moneys thus received will be applied to the general improvement of Glengarry's Home Paper during the current year.

NEWSPAPER LAW

If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not is responsible for the pay. This proceeds upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.

The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post office, removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

Resolutions of Condolence

Mr. A. W. McDougald,
Montreal, Que.

Dear Mr. McDougald:—

I am requested to extend to you on behalf of "The Glengarry Farmers Political Association" (as senior surviving member of the family of the late John Angus McDougald, who was Registrar of the Supreme Court of Ontario, Clerk of the County Court of the United Counties and Registrar of the Surrogate Court of the United Counties) the following resolution, unanimously adopted by a standing vote, at the annual meeting of the Association held in Alexandria, on February 3rd, 1923.

Moved by D. A. Ross M.L.A., Glengarry.

Seconded by Allan P. McDonald, Summerstown.

That this meeting of The Glengarry Farmers Political Association here assembled, place on record their sincere regret for the loss and death of the late John Angus McDougald. Mr. McDougald was always held by the farmers of Glengarry in the highest esteem, more so from the fact that he was a native of the county and spent the greater part of his life here. He was remarkably clannish to the county of his birth, and his hospitality shown to Glengarrymen whenever he met them was a singular expression of his loyalty to the county of his birth.

In the discharge of his many duties he was recognized as an authority, on the many positions he so ably filled.

The resolution also requests that a copy be sent to the family of the late Mr. J. A. McDougald and also to the local press.

I am,
Yours very truly,
DONALD MCKINNON,
Secretary-Treasurer.
Alexandria, Feb. 5th, 1923.

Mrs. John A. McMillan,
Alexandria, Ont.

Dear Mrs. McMillan:—

Allow me to extend to you on behalf of "The Glengarry Farmers Political Association" a Resolution of Condolence, unanimously adopted by a standing vote, at the Annual Meeting of the Association held in Alexandria, on February 3rd, 1923.

Moved by D. A. Ross M.L.A., Glengarry.

Seconded by Allan P. McDonald, Summerstown.

That The Glengarry Farmers Political Association here assembled desire to place on record its sincere sympathy to you, and the members of your family, for the loss of your esteemed husband, the late John Angus McMillan ex-M.L.A. for Glengarry and Stormont, as well as a prominent business man of the county.

Although not of the same political frame of mind, Mr. McMillan was always highly respected by his political opponents, and in the death of John Angus McMillan, Glengarry has lost one of its best residents, particularly the farmers of the county who always found Mr. McMillan a loyal friend, always willing to help them out of their difficulties, whatever they might be, and we are especially indebted to Mr. McMillan for his many and countless efforts put forth on their behalf.

In again extending to you and family our sincere regret, we cannot but say, although dying in the prime of life, he has left a heritage which cannot soon be forgotten.

The resolution further requests a copy to be sent to the bereaved family also to the local press.

I am,
Yours Sincerely,
DONALD MCKINNON,
Secretary-Treasurer.
Alexandria, Feb. 5th, 1923.

Mrs. H. S. Kinloch,
Martintown, Ont.

Dear Mrs. Kinloch:—

On behalf of the Glengarry Farmers Political Association, I wish to extend to you and family the following resolution of condolence unanimously adopted by a standing vote at the Annual Meeting of the Association held in Alexandria on Saturday, February 3rd, 1923.

Moved by D. A. Ross M.L.A., Glengarry.

Seconded by Allan P. McDonald, Summerstown.

That this meeting of the Glengarry Farmers Political Association, here assembled for the Annual Meeting, wish to place on record their sincere regret for the loss of a valuable officer of the Association, in the person of the late Mr. H. S. Kinloch.

His ability as a man was soon recognized by the farmers of his township when they elected him to the office of Councillor for Charlottetown and later as Reeve of the Township, a position he held with marked success for a number of years. Later he was appointed Secretary-Treasurer for the Charlottetown Rural Phone Co. and also was elected Sec'y Treas. for the Glengarry-Stormont Farmers Political Association, both positions being held by him at the time of his death.

He was recognized as a tireless worker in the interests of others, and his sudden demise is deeply regretted by his many friends, especially in the county of Glengarry, which was the field of his labours.

The resolution further requests that copies be sent to the bereaved families and also to the local press.

I am,
Yours Sincerely,
DONALD MCKINNON,
Secretary-Treasurer.
Alexandria, Feb. 5th, 1923.

A Lake Erie Rescue

By Observer

It was a cold, blustery morning, after a wild night storm on Lake Erie in the early fifties. The wind roared through the deep ravine leading from the road to the water, and the trees on either side bent and groaned as if in mortal agony before the fury of the gale. As was his custom, after a heavy storm, the owner of the farm through which the deep, narrow gorge ran to the lake, made his way to the bank to see if any damage had been wrought by the dangerous spot where the outgoing volume of air and water met the outside currents in a vortex if wind-whipped fury. After being buffeted by winds and beset by falling branches, breathless and spent he reached the high lake bank to see an upturned sailing craft lying opposite, with some men clinging to the broken spars and dismantled rigging. With all possible speed he made his way back, flung a saddle on his strongest horse, and set out for Port Stanley, some five miles distant, sparing neither himself nor horse in his mad haste to reach the place where help might be obtained to rescue those in such a perilous position. Three small boats were in the harbor, but not one was available. In the first place, the lake was too rough and wind too strong for small craft to venture out. "We would not last twenty minutes," said one captain, "we would never make it," said the second; "if I were willing I'd forfeit my insurance if the boat was lost, if I went out in this storm," was the reply of the third. That "if" gave hope, and after several fruitless attempts to get the larger boats to make the effort a second appeal was made to the skipper of the third, a small tug. "Have you any property?" he asked the farmer. "Yes, I have 200 acres of land." "Is it valuable?" "It is the most improved farm, with the largest and best buildings, on the lake road," was the reply. "Will you guarantee loss of my boat? I can risk my life, but I have no right to risk the property of others," was the query which revealed the character of both men. "Come with me," was the sole reply, and going over to Squire Price's store, the document was speedily prepared whereby the farmer agreed to be responsible for the tug in event of loss or damage. Volunteers were called for, and a crew quickly secured, and the little, puffing, rolling tub started for the wreck. The owner of the farm having done all he could to aid the ship-wrecked men, returned home, tired but happy in the thought that they had a chance, at least, for their lives. When he reached the lakeside, he saw the wallowing tug, fighting wind and high seas, slowly making its way back towards port, but it was days before he learned that four men had been rescued and the tug and its heroic master were safe in anchorage. One man had succumbed to the cold and fatigue and had slipped off his insecure support, to rise no more. Few knew of the agreement referred to, and the truth of the matter was not generally known, so beyond some words of appreciation from a few Port Stanley men, the incident was closed and apparently forgotten.

A few years after, the owner of this once queerly pledged farm was crossing from Port Stanley to Cleveland on a small sailing vessel, and when about one half the way across, the wind died down and they lay becalmed for part of a day and one night. As the air was close and sultry, not a breath of wind stirring, sleep was out of the question in the stuffy cabin, so all were on deck to pass the waiting hours in better, if not cooler, air. The passenger drifted down to where the sailors were "spinning yarns" to pass away the time, and was moved to listen as one "old salt" remarked: "I've sailed in many waters, been round old Cape Horn twice and across the Bay of Biscay, but my narrowest escape was right on this little, muddy Lake Erie," and urged by his mates to relate his experience, told how the boat he was in capsized off a point about opposite where they now lay becalmed, and how the small boat had been crushed and no rescue seemed possible, when, just as all hope was gone, and one of their crew drowned, they saw a tiny tug heading their way and the four survivors taken off in safety, landed in Port Stanley, and sent on to Buffalo by a boat leaving the next day. And he concluded: "We were told we owed our lives to a farmer who saw our plight and carried the word to Port Stanley, and even pledged his farm as security for damage to the boat, before it could be secured to come to our rescue. And how often I have wished I might meet that man and just take his hand and say, 'Thank you, and God bless you.' But I don't suppose we will ever meet."

The man he wanted to see listened in silence, but after the others had gone below, and the steersman alone was left on deck, he went to him and what passed between the two men will never be known, but as the boat reached, Cleveland, the wheelsman sprang to the dock and called out: "Three cheers for the whitest man I ever met—Lyman Lewis, of the Lake Shore, Elgin County."

Promulgate Rules Of Lenten Season

Lenten regulations for the Diocese of Alexandria as promulgated on Sunday, in all Churches show no changes from the rules which have been in force for the past several years. Every week day is a fast day with meat allowed at the principal meal, which meal may be partaken of either at noon or in the evening, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, with the exception of Ember Saturday. Good Friday will fall on March 30th and Easter Sunday on April 1st, the lenten season proper terminating at noon on Holy Saturday, March 31st, at which time the period of fasting and abstinence from meat will end. Evening service will be held in the Cathedral, here, every Friday evening, and a special lenten sermon will be delivered every Sunday evening, the preacher being one of the neighboring pastors.

active theory and when it is claimed that 200 out of a total 243 associations were failures it would be well to pause before any compromise of this nature. From time to time Canadians are told of the wonderful success attending co-operative marketing in the U.S. If the exponents of this theory were to be believed the United States are represented as being highly successful in working out this scheme. The detailed account of the conditions of the co-operative organizations in the United States will cast considerable light on this much discussed question and should prove to the farmers both in Ontario and Quebec who have been coquetting with this method of marketing their product.

Land Costs Lowered.

Wallace's Farmer says that farm lands in Germany could be bought to-day for from one-fifth to one-tenth the price, measured in dollars, that they could before the war. Of course these lands have been much run-down because of the lack of labor and imported fertilizers during the war, but it does seem strange that land should be so much reduced below pre-war levels, while other commodities are about at pre-war levels as measured in dollars.

STORAGE OF MANURES

IT IS ONE OF THE PROBLEMS OF THE FARM.

Not Always Convenient to Haul Fertilizer Directly to the Fields for Distribution—No Material Loss Is Sustained Where Concrete Pits Are Used—Danger of Heating.

In providing for the storage of manure during the periods when it is impractical to take it directly to the fields for distribution the choice rests between some form of shed, or overhead shelter, and some kind of a pit, or reservoir. It may seem that these quite different forms of storage imply different theories in regard to handling the waste, since one leaves the manure exposed to the elements while the other shelters and shields it from rain and weather.

In making provision for temporary storage of manure two things are sought. The first is to prevent the leaching away of soluble portions; the second is to eliminate heating in the manure pile by crowding out the air with moisture so that the bacteria which cause heating will be denied air from which they derive the oxygen necessary for their work. Both the concrete pit and the overhead shelter accomplish the first of these. When a concrete pit is used it makes no difference whether the manure is under cover or not so far as leaching is concerned. The soluble portions cannot get away in either case. When an overhead shelter is used, there will be scant loss from leaching even if the manure is not stored upon a concrete floor, since the litter will retain the liquid portion of the excrement, while the roof overhead will keep off the rain which would cause the pile to leach.

As for the second objective—that of controlling the heat of the pile—the pit is supposed, theoretically, to take care of this automatically through the rain that falls upon its exposed surface. To eliminate heating it is only necessary to crowd out the air in the waste by moisture. Sometimes, however, the amount of rainfall is not sufficient to keep filled the interstices of the pile. In such cases heating ensues and loss of ammonia takes place. We have seen badly "freedged" manure in open pits. However, this was due to neglect on the part of the owner and might have occurred had the manure been held under cover. The chief virtue of this last form of storage is that it permits one to regulate at will the amount of moisture that manure contains. In either case, the result will be the same if the manure is not permitted to dry out.

With the pit and the overhead shelter making for the same results the choice between them lies in other factors, chief of which is the matter of handling the manure when it is removed. Unless a pit is provided with an underground cistern into which the liquids can pass the task of removing the manure is apt to be anything but agreeable or easy at certain times. It is easier, also, to load manure into a spreader when it does not have to be elevated from a pit sunk below the surface of the earth. However, some pits are so constructed that the spreader can be driven into them. Some will see in the extra equipment necessary for handling of liquids an objection to the pit equipped with a cistern. On the other hand the use of liquid of this kind on early crops is sometimes an advantage. All in all, while the ends served are the same, the choice between a pit and an overhead shelter, either in the form of a simple roof covering or a more elaborate manure house, is one of personal choice.

A Friend to All

Chiropractic is a friend of mankind. It does humanity good. It is sensible in its application and effect on the human system. It harms no one. It relieves suffering so often and so definitely that it is reasonable to generalize and say that it will relieve every form of so-called disease. Sick people have tried in so many different ways to be restored to health that they are naturally skeptical when they hear that Chiropractic Vertebral Adjustments will "TURN THE TRICK". It should be recollected that Chiropractic stands "head and shoulders" above all other Health methods and as such is daily proving its efficacy in restoring to health hundreds of thousands who failed to obtain relief in other methods.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear wife and mother Mrs. James Haggart, who departed this life on February 17th, 1920.

The blow was great, the shock severe,

We little thought her death so near,

Only those who have lost can tell

The pain of party without farewell.

Sadly missed and ever remembered by husband and family.

Maxville, Ont.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of my dear nephew, Private Garret MacDonald, 38th Bu. C.E.F., who died in Etampes, France, 19th Feb. 1919, aged 22 years and 4 months.

I think I see his smiling face, As he bade me last "good bye" And left his home and friends so dear,

In foreign land to die.

He lies beside his comrades In a grave across the foam But his name is written in letters of love,

On his mother's heart at home.

A SMALL THING BUT MUCH TALKED OF

IN the centre of this group is the much discussed gun captured by the British at Bunker Hill in 1775. Bunker Hill is just outside Boston, and the engagement in which the gun was captured began the War of Independence. Bostonians have displayed much interest in the little trophy, so much so that they have proposed that the gun be returned to them as an evidence of Canada's friendly feeling for the United States. For many years the gun has stood on the parade ground in the Citadel of Quebec. As the above photo shows it is not very big, and its death-dealing efficiency was probably not high, although it most likely made a fair amount of noise. American visitors to the ancient city are always keenly interested in it. In the above photo is seen a group of Knights Templar and their ladies from Boston, part of a large party who enjoyed the excellent winter sporting facilities of Quebec during the latter part of January, just at the time that the proposal was made that the gun be returned to its original owners. Beyond the Citadel is seen the top of the new tower of the Chateau Frontenac which has been added as a new crown to that splendid example of French Chateau architecture, and to provide three hundred rooms to accommodate the growing number of visitors to Canada's most historic city. Every year sees Quebec growing more and more popular for both winter sport lovers and summer sight-seers who find there a vast fund of interest in the city's rich store of historic places and buildings. The other illustration is of the famous Chateau as it now appears with its new tower.

Explored the Rockies in Advance of Railroad

ONE of the pioneers of Canada is passing and the cracks of the man who blazed the way into this or that once new land grow yearly thinner. The generation to whom it was given to first penetrate the Rocky Mountains and to seek out the routes which are today avenues of uninterrupted travel has all but passed, and while for the eyes of other adventurous spirits the Canadian Pacific Rockies still reserve in countless valleys and untravelled mountain passes scenes as splendid as any of its well-known wonders, it is to the men of this passing generation that Canada owes its greatest debt of gratitude. They penetrated the wilderness, and made it possible for others to follow. Backed by the men of imperial vision and determination who imagined and then built Canada's first national railroad, the Canadian Pacific, as the corner stone of Canada's future, they found their way against almost insuperable difficulties and mapped the roads for other men to travel over.

On January 26 last, at Vancouver, another of these men died in the person of Captain Frank Armstrong, the history of whose life is but a history of the opening up to civilization of the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia. Frank Armstrong was born in Montreal and educated at the High School of that city. He began his career in the office of the Harbour Commissioners as assistant secretary. The family connection with that office was of long duration, his great-grandfather having been Commissioner about 100 years ago when the office was an imperial appointment.

The call of the West with its adventure and opportunity was strong among the youth of Montreal of those days, and the old city gave richly of its best to the upbuilding of newer Canada. Frank Armstrong was among those who went into the new country, and early in his career he was a member of the C. P. R. survey that, under the late Major Rogers, found the Rogers Pass through the Selkirk. One of the most interesting of the events in which he figures was connected with the finding of the Eagle Pass through the Selkirk range in 1881. On this trip he accompanied his life-long friend, the Hon. Fred Aylmer, of Richmond, and Major Rogers after whom the Rogers Pass is named. The engineering party wintered at Moberly Peak in 1882, and through a combination of circumstances suffered great privations. When things got most desperate Frank Armstrong volunteered to go south to Idaho on snowshoes with a toboggan to get food, and this arduous task he successfully accomplished in the face of great difficulties. The Aylmer and Armstrong ranches on the upper Columbia river near Windermere, were established in the early eighties. Frank Armstrong was the pioneer of steam boat navigation on both the upper Columbia and upper Kootenay rivers. When the railway was finally built through, the first load of freight carried into the Columbia valley included boilers and engines for his steamboats. These were built at Sorel, Que., and hauled across the continent. He was one of a party to go by canoe from Lake Windermere, the mother lake of the Columbia river all the way to Astoria at its mouth on the Pacific Ocean, the intention being to report on the navigability of that great stream. At the outbreak of the Great War, he offered his services to the British Government, although he was then 50 years of age. Later when war was declared against Turkey and the Mesopotamia campaign decided upon, he offered to ship there the materials for a light draft steamer suited to navigating the Tigris, and engaged to have it put together in running order thirty days after its arrival. The offer was not accepted but later on he was called upon to take a number of experienced river men to England, and after having been torpedoed in the Mediterranean, he and his party reached Mesopotamia and Captain Armstrong did much good work in the organizing of navigation on the Tigris. He was later sent to Egypt to make improvements in the war-time navigation of the Nile. While in the tropical service he suffered from the effects of the climate and never fully recovered. About three months ago he met with an accident which was complicated by a return of the complaint from which he had suffered in the first, and his death came without warning at a time when he seemed to be progressing favourably. Captain Armstrong took a great interest in the David Thomson Memorial present presented last year at Lake Windermere, and being greatly beloved by the Indians he helped in the organization of the Indian part of the voyage. In 1889 he married Miss Maud, daughter of Alfred A. Barber, of Montreal, and leaves two daughters, the Misses Charlotte and Ruth Armstrong. The family, of which he is a member, has lived in Montreal for seven generations. His brother, L. O. Armstrong, the well-known lawyer, has been a life-long member of the C. P. R. staff.

Sleeve Styles

"What kind of sleeves shall I wear?" is the question of the hour for women. The answer is, any kind you like, one or two, or even none at all. Fashion, which always looks ahead, has planned some fascinating elaborations and simplifications of the mere commonplace sleeve. Some of the new sleeveless gowns seen in the shops are so cunningly arranged that they suggest a bare shoulder, rather than reveal it.

One dream of an afternoon frock in georgette and lace has a perfectly straight up-and-down corsage. This showed curiously floating panels about six inches deep, extending outwards from the shoulder, both back and front. These are left hanging, so that here the sleeve was turned into a gossamer adornment.

Another kind of sleeve, seen chiefly in an evening dress, consists of a width of chiffon loosely attached to the hip on one side. This is carried up to the shoulder and is tacked on to the shoulder-strap. From there it is allowed to float away to a length of 1 1/2 yards. One arm is left perfectly bare. This idea can also be developed in lace, chiffon or tulle. Given a nicely rounded arm, the effect of this is very beautiful.

Most of the sleeve vagaries are restricted to afternoon or evening dresses. In the case of ordinary tailor-made sleeves are rather long and close-fitting. They should always be plain, and are usually finished with a band of fur.

Are Reporters to Blame?

(London Advertiser)
How often have you heard the phrase, "You can't believe a word you read in the newspaper." Or, if not that way, then "The reporters write what they are told to get and put in what the paper wants." Arthur L. Clarke, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, comes out with a statement in Editor and Publisher, showing papers and reporters in a different light.

A rumor reaches a newspaper office to the effect that a bank merger is to be consummated. A reporter is sent to ascertain the facts. Does the bank president admit the truth of the rumor but ask that, for business reasons, the matter be not made public for a few days? He does not. He tells the reporter there is no truth in the rumor. A few days later the deal goes through and—the newspaper knows the bank president lied.

A public official grants an interview, in which he makes certain statements. The next day political or other pressure is brought to bear. Does he come out in the open and admit his mistake or his change of heart? He does not. He promptly repudiates the interview of the day before and—the reporter knows he lied.

A society matron's daughter becomes engaged to a prominent man, but the family is not ready to make the announcement. Does the society matron tell the truth and ask that the matter be kept quiet for a few days? She does not. She pretends surprise and denies there is any foundation for the rumor. The following week the announcement is made and—the society editor knows the woman has prevaricated.

So it goes on down the line. People who would not think of deceiving business associates, people who would scorn to resort to untruth or subterfuge in ordinary affairs, men and women whose word literally is as good as their bond in financial matters—these are the people for the most part who have no compunctions of conscience about deliberately lying to a newspaper representative.

Every newspaper reporter in the country knows his job is not worth two cents if he is detected intentionally misrepresenting facts or misquoting what has been told to him. His job is to tell the truth of what he sees and hears, and in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred he can be depended upon to get things straight and to write exactly what has been told to him.

Advice For Knitting

Hand-knitted jumpers show no sign of disappearing from the wardrobes of the fashionable, and hand-knitted one-piece frocks and costumes are considered just the thing for country and seaside wear. Most girls who want to follow this fashion, must do their own knitting, as hand-made goods are naturally exceedingly expensive to buy in the shops.

When embarking upon a piece of work of this kind, it is as well to recognize that it is emphatically not work just for odd moments. Five minutes here and ten minutes there help to make the garment grow quickly, but such intermittent knitting generally has an uneven appearance, thus betraying its amateur origin. It is, in fact, the professional touch that gives a knitted garment its chief distinction. To get this the knitter must follow her chosen pattern with discretion, according to her style of knitting, and proceed by measurements, instead of keeping blindly to the book. A well-cut paper pattern is the best guide. A small piece of knitting is worked first, removed from the needles and laid flat on the paper pattern. It is then easy to discover how many stitches must be knitted to the inch.

When comparing measurements never stretch the knitting, but always lay it flat on the pattern. Correct tension is essential for complete success. The stitches should offer a slight resistance on the needle when pushed with the finger. If the stitches require effort to move them the tension is too tight; if the stitches slip off, the tension is too loose.

Edge stitches are important. Purl the first stitch of garter pattern and plain the first stitch of purl pattern. This gives a good firm edge. Never join wool or silk in the middle of a row. The professional always joins at the beginning of a row, leaving a good end to be invisibly darned in and out of the edge later.

Always cast off on the wrong side loosely enough to insure that the edge will not "cockle."

When joining seams the method known as "grafting" should be employed to give a professional touch. Grafting is fully explained in any good book on knitting.

Wool may be joined quite easily without tying a knot. Thread the end of the piece being knitted through a darning needle. Now take the new piece and run the needle right through the middle of the new wool-carrying the needle through for several inches. Finally pull the needle right out at one side and cut off the wool closely, and you will have an excellent join.

Artificial silk must either be knitted close enough to keep its shape absolutely unimpaired, or, if an open pattern be chosen, it is wise to make the jumper distinctly on the small side and then stretch it out by ironing. Once stretched in this way it will keep the desired shape.

Making Tea and Coffee

Tea can be easily spoiled in the making unless attention is paid to a few simple rules. See that the teapot is quite free from odd leaves. It must be hot, so fill with boiling water, and pour out before you put in the tea for infusion. For the tea never use water that has been boiled a long time, but fill the kettle with fresh water, and the moment it boils pour it on the tea. Above all, the water must be boiling to make tea properly.

Our friends in the United States are excellent coffee makers, and there is no reason why anyone should not be. Making good coffee is an extremely easy process. These are the rules: The coffee beans must be fresh, and freshly ground; the coffee must not be allowed to boil. Pour freshly boiled water on the grounds, and place the coffee pot on top of the tea kettle for fifteen minutes. That is all.

It would be a good plan for all who are not close to a store to keep a small coffee grinder of their own. If near a store, get coffee ground in small quantities, and keep it in a tightly sealed glass jar or tin.

Pine Apple Pudding

Drain juice from a tin of sliced pineapple and add to it enough cold water to make four cups. Put in a double boiler with 2-3 cup of quick tapioca, 1 cup of sugar, and seasoning of salt. Cook until clear, stirring frequently. Chop the pineapple fine and add to the cooked tapioca. Serve cold with whipped cream and garnish with cherries.

A report from Montreal states that the White Star Line officials have announced a five dollar reduction on live Canadian cattle across the Atlantic, from $20 to $15 a head. This reduction is expected to prove one of the most significant events of the 1923 shipping season.

No less than 97 head of the fine Holstein herd of W. A. McElroy, Hillside, Dundas county, were destroyed after a test by Government officials for tuberculosis. The Government allowed $130 a head for the cattle, but this does not nearly compensate Mr. McElroy for his loss.

The St. Valentine Party, under the auspices of the C.W.L., Tuesday evening, in Alexander Hall, was a fitting terminal to the pre-lenten festivities. The ladies had gone to considerable trouble in decorating and preparing many novelties for the occasion and the Valentine Booth and Post Office did excellent business while the candy booth was exceptionally well patronised. Mr. G. P. McLaughlin made an ideal chairman, and a programme of high merit consisting of orchestral numbers, vocal selections and Highland dancing concluding with the laughable comedy "Aunt Maggie's Will," admirably staged by the young ladies pleased everybody. The promoters feel indebted to Rev. Dr. Guinevan who displayed so much interest in the arrangements.

While it is true that the standard of Ontario butter is lower than any other province in the dominion, the standard of the butter which is manufactured in the factories in Eastern Ontario is not responsible for the rather poor showing. L. A. Bufelt, superintendent of the Eastern Dairy school, says that when the test was made for the province of Ontario the samples of butter from two factories in Eastern Ontario took special prizes, while the western creameries, samples were rated as seconds.

While target shooting in the woods in the vicinity of the town, with several friends, on Saturday afternoon last, Leroy Cowan, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cowan, was accidentally shot. The bullet from a 22 calibre rifle entered the left thigh about six inches above the knee traversing the soft part of the leg without doing injury to any important structure. Dr. J. T. Hope rendered the necessary medical assistance and it is only a question of a day or two when the young lad will be out again. Another case of didn't know it was loaded, and an object lesson to all who carry a rifle.

Do You Remember?

Two Shows in One.

—Life passes us by quickly but we can treasure its joys forever.

—We long to bring back all of its tender memories. Our happiest hours are spent in remembering.

—We think tenderly of our early sweet-heart days.

—We remember the first kiss, the first pang of love.

—Many things that seemed so serious once are not important now.

—But love remains always the big and beautiful thing in our lives.

Remembrance
