

Alexandria Rural School Fair

The annual School Fair was held in the Armories, here, on Tuesday of this week, under trying circumstances, as there was a steady downpour of rain which undoubtedly affected in a measure the exhibits and the attendance as well. However there was a lot of fine looking specimens of grain, flowers, vegetables, baking, sewing, drawing, nature study, poultry and other live stock and competition in many instances was quite keen. These fairs are yearly becoming more popular and are fast eclipsing some of the district fairs, here and elsewhere and eventually will replace them.

Progressive Party to Meet in Toronto

Plans have been completed for the holding in Toronto of a Provincial convention of the Progressive party in Ontario. It was announced last week by Hon. Manning W. Doherty, Acting Leader of the Progressive party in the Legislature. The dates for the convention have been fixed for Nov 18 and 19.

According to the arrangements already made the Progressive political organizations in the various Provincial constituencies will be asked to call meetings, and each meeting will select ten delegates to attend the Toronto convention. It is claimed that the necessary political organizations exist in most of the constituencies, and convention managers and officials expect an attendance of between 600 and 1,000 delegates, it was said Friday. There are 111 constituencies in the Province.

When the delegates assemble in convention the first question to come before them will be whether or not to organize a political party; whether the delegates want a party distinct from the old party organizations. Should the delegates decide to form such a party, then one of the tasks confronting them will be to give the new party a name.

Following this, the important part of the convention will be the drawing up and approving of a party platform. Another important work of the delegates will be the creation of an organization which will act in association with similar organizations in other Provinces, in matters pertaining to the field of Federal politics.

To Choose Permanent Leader

One of the most interesting tasks before the November convention will be the choice of a permanent Leader for the Legislature. At present the Progressive members in the House are led by Hon. Manning W. Doherty, former Minister of Agriculture, who assumed the position last January until a permanent Leader should be selected. At the time Mr. Doherty said that he would accept the leadership only until a party convention chose a permanent Leader, and that he would not accept the position of permanent Leader. The name of Hon. E. C. Drury already has been mentioned for the permanent leadership, though Mr. Drury has not a seat in the House.

Sense of Direction

On any expedition, whether on foot or by automobile, there are nearly always some persons who depend on others to find the way. Sometimes they are the persons who should be responsible for finding it, but they are uncertain; they vacillate at crossroads and ask advice of others in the party; and usually there will be some one who, though he has never been over the road before, will say definitely which is the route to take, and his decision will prove to be right. He has what the others lack, a sense of direction, an ability to map out in his mind the course already taken and that required to bring him to his destination. And that ability implies acuteness of observation, accuracy of memory and trustworthy power of reasoning.

What is the aim of education if not to strengthen and improve the sense of direction? Not merely the sense of direction that is a fairly sure guide through unfamiliar scenes of town or country, but a sense that shall keep us from taking the wrong turn at any of the numerous crossroads of life and going permanently astray or having to retrace our steps, perhaps at great cost and sorrow.

Most persons, however well educated, make a rather haphazard progress through life. They seize opportunities and make compromises and undergo changes of heart and of points of view according to the influences of the moment. They may not abandon the standards of uprightness that every well-educated person holds, but they are likely to mistake the road that leads to a life of the highest significance and the truest happiness and to get back to the main thoroughfare only after many wanderings from it. Sometimes they come upon it when it is too late to arrive at what to their youthful eyes had been not merely a possible but even a certain destination. The familiar line in the comic song, "I don't know where I'm going, but I'm on my way," has many a tragic illustration in the lives of people who have no sense of direction.—Youth's Companion.

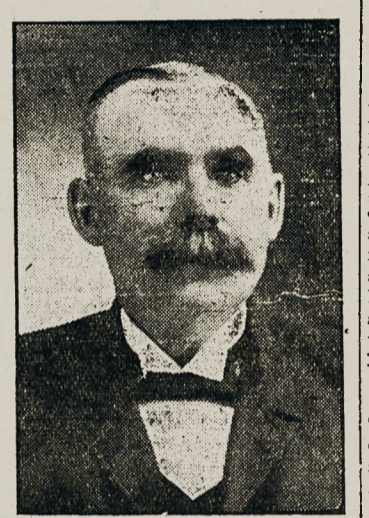

The Coming Plebiscite

With the Plebiscite on the Ontario Temperance Act to take place on the 23rd of October, The Glengarry News is prepared to set aside, free of any charges, a column space weekly to be edited by the O.T.A. Central Committee and an equal amount of space to be edited by the Moderation Committee, all copy to reach the office by Tuesday.

Death Summons Mr. A. A. McKinnon

In the death of the late Mr. Alexander A. McKinnon, of lot 36-3rd Loehel, which took place at the Hotel Dieu Hospital, Cornwall, on the morning of Tuesday, the 30th September, where for the preceding week he had been undergoing treatment, Glengarry loses one of its best and most outstanding citizens, a man endowed with most kindly qualities of heart and breadth of view, being of that type of Scottish gentleman which can always be depended upon.

The late Mr. McKinnon who was in his 83rd year scorned the mean things of life believing in the upright, honourable life and the spirit of fairness at all times. He possessed a generous heart and was a true friend to all neighbors irrespective of class or creed as was particularly shown by the very large concourse which attended his funeral.

THE LATE MR. A. A. MCKINNON

Mr. McKinnon was born on lot 36-3rd Loehel, being a son of Alexander McKinnon, and his wife Catherine McGillis. He received his education at the Brothers' School here, subsequently taking up the avocation of farming. While giving it his close attention, Mr. McKinnon found time to take a deep and active interest in Municipal affairs of the township, serving in several capacities as Assessor, County Valuator, Councillor for five years, 1897-1901 and Reeve for six years, 1902-1907, winning for himself by impartial dealings and honesty of purpose the respect and esteem of the ratepayers generally.

The late Mr. McKinnon was one of the principal organizers of The Glengarry Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company being its first vice-president, in 1895, and its president in 1899, remaining a director of the Company till December, 1907. Upon the death of the late Mr. Alexander McNeil, Glen Sandfield, in 1908, then one of the energetic agents of the Company, Mr. McKinnon was appointed in his stead, which appointment he held until his death, giving at all times of his best that its interests might increase and multiply.

He was twice married, his first wife being Rachel, daughter of Donald McGillis, who died in 1876. He later married Jennie, daughter of Mr. James Weir, 3rd Loehel, who also predeceased him. Three sons and one daughter survive, Donald, of Dakoto, John, 36-3rd Loehel, Alexander, 36-3rd Loehel and Rachel at home. He is also survived by two brothers, Gregor (at present in the Hotel Dieu Hospital, Cornwall) and John of Winnipeg, Man.

The funeral from his late residence, to St. Finnan's Cathedral and cemetery, took place yesterday morning and proved to be one of the largest and most representative for some time, every section of Glengarry sending its delegation. Requiem Mass was chanted by Rev. J. J. Macdonell P.P. and in the sanctuary were Mgr. D. R. Macdonald, Glen Nevis, Revs. A. L. McDonald, Glen Robertson, Ewen J. Macdonald, Loehel, C. F. Gauthier, Greenfield, J. A. Huot, and D. A. McPhee, Alexandria and N. McCormick, of Coleman, Alta.

An augmented choir, under the leadership of Miss Cuddon rendered the Mass effectively.

Father McPhee officiated at the grave.

The honorary pallbearers, were Messrs. Jas. McPhee, Donald Lothian, J. N. Gauthier, John A. McDougall, Dan A. McDonald, Francis Trotter, Donald McCaskill and Angus McKinnon, the active bearers being Messrs. E. J. Macdonald, Allan Weir, J. D. McKinnon, William Irvine, V. G. Clisholm and Duncan Kennedy.

Relatives and friends from a distance were Mr. John McKinnon, brother, Winnipeg; the Misses C. M. Weir, K. Ruddy and Mr. Jack Weir, Ottawa, Mr. Ranald Weir, Cornwall, Mr. and Mrs. Sandy McGillis, Mr. John McGillis, Mrs. Archie McGillis, St. Andrews West.

Floral tributes were received from Mrs. D. J. McDonald and Mrs. Angus McKinnon while spiritual offerings included

National Federation of Women's Liberal Clubs

Ottawa, Oct. 1.—Liberal women look forward to a revival of the principles of Liberalism during Premier Kings' present western tour. This is clear from an outline of a statement by the chief of their organization, Miss Florence W. Edwards, Ottawa, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the proposed National Federation of Women's Liberal Clubs. She feels that everywhere throughout the four Western Provinces, Liberal women will be active in the preparation of a welcome to the first citizen of Canada, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King. As a preliminary to this greeting clubs will meet and new ones will spring up. The Federation Chairman draws attention to the fact that no leader of any party ever has been so acclaimed by the women folk as Premier King by Grand assemblies of the fair sex in Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and elsewhere. As a leader he has a monopoly of such splendid gatherings and particularly so in the City of Ottawa where all leaders daily are observed.

TRULY NATIONAL LEADER

In keeping with this fine sentiment towards the man whom all Canadians look for guidance, Miss Edwards apply remarks:

"Premier King goes West not merely as the head of a great historic party or the leader of the House of Commons as Prime Minister but as the outstanding figure to which all Liberal-minded and progressive electors of every party look for an expression of their views and an exposition of their aspirations."

Policies and Principles Greater Than Organization and Parties.

In every other country in the world Toryism or Kaiserism has been shattered the progressive-minded elements are split in twain. This division Miss Edwards avers is not so pronounced in Canada because the Canadian Prime Minister realizes as he has done for years past that a party is but a means whereby certain policies and principles are advanced. He thus receives support from all classes, save those who are not liberal-minded. "Some of his own followers," Miss Edwards points out have differed with him but this has given opportunity to many others to rally to Mr. King's support in the House of Commons and elsewhere because policies and principles are stronger than organizations and parties."

New Voters Looking Up and Marching Forward.

It was intimated to Miss Edwards that possibly this new arrangement of parties was due to the wholesome respect for the Women electors as they had come into the fray but shortly and their minds were not filled with the old order. To this she responded that as all women were as youths in politics it was sufficient for them to look to Liberalism that moves ever forward to fresh horizons and the road which it trends echoing to the feet of the young. In concluding her conversation Miss Edwards said that as encouragement to the Premier she recalled the words: "Stablish, continue our march, "On to the bound of the waste, "On to the CITY of God."

To Our Local Advertisers

You know, in your business, what it would be if all your day's customers waited till ten minutes of closing time and then squeezed in and demanded instant and perfect attention. It's exactly like that when advertisers squeeze their copy into our office at the last minute and then expect the same results as if they'd given the composing room employees enough time to turn the adv. into snappy layouts. You do your best by our advertising only when you give us time to do our best by it. The above applies equally as well to correspondents. Let us have your copy early.

Compulsory Education

Reductions are effected through cutting out material which has found a place in the past in the courses of study, "but which has a very remote relation to the needs of the child. The material omitted includes, mainly, rules and calculations in arithmetic that have no very direct practical application; technical and formal work in grammar, such as difficult parsing and analysis that has no bearing upon speech or written composition; minute details in the prescriptions in geography and history, and unreasonable requirements on the technical side in such subjects as nature study and hygiene."

The Premier's Summing-Up

The Premier's summary concludes with the following outline: "The courses as described above provide for: "1. The obligatory courses: Reading and literature, arithmetic, composition and spelling, grammar, history, geography, health and physical culture, art and constructive work, nature study and agriculture. (The latter two are tabled as minimum courses.) "2. Supplemental courses (optional): Art and constructive work, nature study and agriculture, music, manual training, household science. "From this list a board may on the approval of the Inspector select such courses prescribed for Forms 1 to IV, and such topics of these subjects as in its judgement are desirable and practicable in the condition of the school."

Premier Announces Education Reform

Simplification of the public school curriculum, elimination of about 40 per cent, of the Department of Education regulations for the administration of schools, curtailment to a minimum of the amount of homework to be imposed upon school children, a near approach to local autonomy in school affairs, and provision of an hour and a half in the school day for children to devote to optional school work—all these steps were announced last week by Premier G. Howard Ferguson in his capacity as Minister of Education.

The hour and a half optional study period is being provided, said the Premier, with the direct object of relieving the pupils of much of the school grind and of the burden of homework. The aim is not, and never was, he said, to entirely eliminate homework, but merely to minimize it. The Premier's draft regulations were approved yesterday following conference with Department of Education officials, who all subscribed to the Premier's scheme.

Many Regulations Cut Out.

"We have eliminated 40 per cent. of the regulations," stated Mr. Ferguson, "and the rest of them we have tried to make flexible and adaptable. And we have put them in, not as regulations, but as suggestions, or directions, putting on the local inspector the responsibility of exercising a discretion in a way that will meet local situations. We have done two things—reduced the number of subjects, eliminating some and making others optional by combining others."

Reconstruction of the public school courses of study has been undertaken, stated the Premier's written summary, with the purpose of adjusting subjects of study to meet more directly the needs of the pupil, and reducing pressure, especially in graded schools, and giving greater opportunity for study in school hours, with a view to preventing an undue amount of homework.

Courses of Study Divided

Courses of study have been divided into two parts: a minimum prescription of work for pupils in all elementary schools supplementary courses in certain subjects which are optional with schools on the approval of the inspector. These supplementary courses make possible a certain amount of differentiation between the courses offered in urban and rural schools.

Reductions are effected through cutting out material which has found a place in the past in the courses of study,

"but which has a very remote relation to the needs of the child. The material omitted includes, mainly, rules and calculations in arithmetic that have no very direct practical application; technical and formal work in grammar, such as difficult parsing and analysis that has no bearing upon speech or written composition; minute details in the prescriptions in geography and history, and unreasonable requirements on the technical side in such subjects as nature study and hygiene."

Compulsory Education

Reductions are also to be effected through postponing material which can better be presented to the pupil in later stages. This is made possible by the period of compulsory education.

"The curriculum of the public schools has been congested largely because certain subjects which were regarded as necessary to pupils before leaving school have found a place in the course through the demands of agitators. What is regarded as important, but too difficult in the forms in which it has been presented, has been retained and carried forward to later forms. This has been done more particularly in arithmetic, geography, science and agriculture. Mathematical and science problems demanded a certain maturity of reasoning, and a mistake has been made in the past in forcing these upon the attention of children at too early a stage."

There is to be a combining of subjects in the interests of efficiency and simplification such, for instance, as literature and reading composition and spelling, nature study and agriculture, physical culture and health, art and constructive work.

The Premier's Summing-Up The Premier's summary concludes with the following outline: "The courses as described above provide for: "1. The obligatory courses: Reading and literature, arithmetic, composition and spelling, grammar, history, geography, health and physical culture, art and constructive work, nature study and agriculture. (The latter two are tabled as minimum courses.) "2. Supplemental courses (optional): Art and constructive work, nature study and agriculture, music, manual training, household science. J. W. CREWSON, I.P.S.

THE INGLENEUK

(By G. Watt Smith M.A., D.D.)

Ask whatsoever you will and it shall be done unto you.

The discussion goes on as to whether it is possible to effect cures of disease through the means of anointing with oil or some mystic rite in a particular locality. Both kinds of cures have been advertised, some of them verified by careful examination, many of them illusive, at an address which cannot be located. But there can be no doubt as to the words before us as contained in the Holy scriptures, and therefore of accepted worth and authority to us all.

They have however a vital qualification. Our Lord said before he uttered them these other words, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you." Here is the mystery of godliness. If we could get rid of every ache and pain, arrange weather to meet our convenience, remove some unclean person from our neighbourhood, detect and punish every transgressor of the law, extend the days of life to suit the exigencies of family or business convenience what a jumble of a world there would be. But when we come into that state of mind which is spoken of by our Lord as abiding in Him we are not moved by the smaller desires of individual comfort but place ourselves in the great world as part of the mighty organism through which God is revealing His own will and working out His divine plan. We cannot attain the answer to whatsoever we will until we have reached the state of surrender to what God sees to be best, the readiness to acknowledge that our wills are ours to make them His.

There is the minister of religion known to many readers of this paper, Rev. Grover Livingstone B.A. who lived for a time in this neighbourhood and approved himself as a preacher of wonderful power. He spent most of his days in the darkness of his affliction and in that limitation won his way to academic distinction. But he fell a victim to tuberculosis and is now in the Sanatorium at Gravenhurst, just beginning to be cheered with the hope of recovery, after over twelve months of confinement to bed. I read these words to him last week. How good they were to him. If any of us who generally enjoy health could put ourselves in his place, not only with the limitations to which I have referred but also with the care of a wife, could we readily subscribe to the acceptance of the words quoted. I asked him if ever in the weary weeks which had passed his faith had failed him and he replied that he was thankful that he had never suffered that trial. It was often comatose but never dead.

How can we explain it? It is more wonderful than the courage of the Martyr who knows that he is sowing the seed of the church. It is attained through the conscious union when men abide in Christ.

Alexandria Farmers' Shipping Club

There was a fairly large run of cattle on the market for sale this week, and prices were off from 25c. to 50c. per ewt, due, principally, to the fact that both Monday and Tuesday were Jewish Holidays, and they did not operate. The top price paid for steers was 66c, and the common to good kinds sold from 3 1/2 to 5c. Good cows sold from 3 1/2 to 4c. Common to medium cows 2 1/2 to 3c. Canners and Cutters 1 1/2 to 2c. There is no demand for bulls and the price for Bologna bulls is from 2 to 2 1/2.

The calf trade was good, an odd top calf selling as high as 10c. Good calves 8 to 9c. Common to medium calves 6 to 7c. Grassers 2 1/2 to 3 1/2c.

Hog prices were steady with last week, the thick smooths bringing from 9 1/2 to 9 3/4, and the Government graded selects 10 1/4c. fed and watered. Sows 6 1/2 to 7c.

Mixed lots of good lambs brought 10c. Some picked lots of ewes and weathers sold from 10 1/2 to 10 3/4c, sheep sold from 4 to 6c.

Sales for the Alexandria Club were as follows:—3 Cows 2915 lbs. 2 1/4c.; 2 bulls, 1775 lbs. 2c.; 2 calves, 280 lbs., 9c.; 13 selects 2464 lbs. 10 1/4c.; 19 Hogs, 2800 lbs. 9.40; 1 sow, 455 lbs. 7c.; 22 lambs, 1615 lbs. 9 1/4; 1 sheep 110 lbs 5 1/2c.

Of Interest To Women

THE YOUNG HOUSEWIFE (Youth's Companion)

To make a house into a home the housekeeper must love her work, must see in it something besides drudgery. The daily routine of housekeeping can never be wholly freed from drudgery, but science and invention are constantly lightening the burden of it, and wise planning and a systematic method will lighten it still further. Many women fail to make and maintain an attractive home because they work at loose ends, without any definite plan. Such haphazard methods always end in weariness and discouragement. Careful planning is as necessary in housework as in any other business. A general outline, a weekly plan and a daily, detailed time schedule are among the most useful of household furnishings.

If the young housekeeper has help, she should have her schedules made out in writing. Giving the maid a clear-cut outline of her work in the beginning will avert many misunderstandings. A special table or cupboard in which to keep the books that have to do with the housework is also a convenience. The series of articles that is to follow, presented under the general title of the Young Housewife, will cover some of the practical problems of housekeeping, including methods of cleaning, the care of woodwork and metals, household posts, laundry equipment and methods. It begins where many of the housewife's problems must always begin and many of them end—in the kitchen.

1. Keeping the Kitchen Clean

The kitchen, as the place where food is prepared, presents peculiar problems of care and cleaning. Because food may be contaminated and so becomes a carrier of disease, you must make the cleanliness of the kitchen one of your first duties.

An old rule but a good one is, "A place for everything and everything in its place." An orderly kitchen will be not only tidy but clean, since you cannot effectively clean round things that are out of place. Keep all food in the refrigerator, in a special cupboard or in the cellar; all waste in proper receptacles; all dishes in the dish cupboard; all pots and pans on their proper hooks and shelves; small tools in accessible places.

If you have planned and directed the building of your own new kitchen, you will have things as they should be. But if you are not so fortunate, you can still rearrange things so as to make a real workroom. Your work naturally falls into certain centres, such as those for preparing food, cooking it, serving it and washing the dishes. Group your equipment accordingly. Round the centre where you prepare the food place the pans, spoons, beaters and similar utensils. A kitchen cabinet is the ideal receptacle for them, but a table and shelves make a satisfactory substitute. Round the stove group the cooking utensils that you use there, as well as the flour, salt and pepper. A drop-leaf table or a wheeled tray on the route from stove to dining room make a serving centre. At the sink, the dish-washing centre, have ample space for the dishes, the dish pan and the dish drainer. A shelf or a small cabinet keeps in order the soaps and other washing supplies. You will need a cupboard or pantry for surplus supplies, so that the working centres need be equipped only for immediate needs. Never let the kitchen table become so cluttered that you have to clear a place whenever you want to work. Above all never let food stand uncovered. It draws flies and other vermin and soon becomes unfit to eat.

The special cleaning problems have to do with the stove, the refrigerator, the sink, the care of food and care of waste. A clean, well-kept stove makes the food taste better; the special care that you need to give it will depend upon the kind of stove. If it is one of the newer kind with a washable top, the task is simple. If it needs to be blackened, do it often enough to prevent rust spots from forming. There is on the market a dustless polish, which is good for the purpose. After cleaning and blackening the range—naturally you would not apply blackening over grease or spilled food—light a small fire in the stove to dry it thoroughly.

Clean a gas stove with kerosene, but use washing soda and hot water on the burners occasionally. A kerosene stove must have daily care if it is to give the best service. Wipe off the wicks, or kindlers, and keep them even. So long as the enamel is unbroken, the cleaning will not be troublesome, since soap and water will do it. Don't let things boil over into the burners, or you will have hours of work to clean up afterward. Keep the tank well filled, the valve and feed pipes open and the air holes free. Remember that a clean stove, no matter what its fuel is, gives twice the service of a dirty, choked one.

The refrigerator of course must be kept scrupulously clean, or it will breed germs. Keep the box well iced. It is poor economy to use too little ice or to save it by using newspapers, because it is the melting of the ice that produces the low temperature. Every day go over the contents and use up left-overs as much as possible. One mouldy dish of food may spoil much good food. Wipe up immediately all spilled food. Once a week clear out the box, remove the racks and detachable pipes and clean each one separately. Wash out the box with soap and water or with washing soda and water, then chill it with clear, cold water. Hot water raises the temperature of the whole box and need be used only for an occasional scalding, provided you are faithful in the weekly care. Clear out the drain underneath to prevent it from clogging and overflowing. Rec-ice the and let it chill for several hours before you replace the food.

The sink also may be breeding place for vermin unless it is kept clean and fairly dry. Make the walls round the sink waterproof or protect them with oilcloth. Always pour dishwater and other liquids through the sink strainer. Never allow greaseto go down the pipes, for it clogs them; and coffee grounds should not go down unless there is a very strong water pressure to carry them out of the trap. It is always easier to keep the sink drain clear than to clear it out. If the pipes do clog, however, draw out the clogging material with a suction pump and flood the trap with hot water. After finishing the dishwashing it is a good plan to flood the drain with very hot water and then to dry the sink. Mend leaky faucets immediately, for dropping water forms rust spots in the sink.

Keep the food in dust-proof containers; uniform containers of enameled tin or glass are neater than the original cartons and bags. Perishable food is of course to be kept in the refrigerator or the cellar.

The care of waste is important. An unclean garbage pail gives off unpleasant odors. Have a covered one and empty it daily, then cleanse it with washing soda and hot water, seal it and leave it open to the air. A paper lining lessens the work of cleaning, especially if you do not throw liquids into the pail. Rubbish should be collected in a waste basket or box; the container matters less than using it faithfully. Empty it daily into the stove or wherever you dispose of your rubbish.

The kitchen must be equipped with screens to keep out both dust and flies and should have a ventilator to carry off cooking odors. The floor should be such as can be washed and kept spotless, and the walls should be moisture proof. If you consider and arrange all these matters carefully, you will find that your kitchen is an attractive spot—one where you are glad to spend your time.

TENDER FEET

Most of our troubles with our feet come from the breaking down of one of the arches or both,—the longitudinal or the transverse,—though sometimes the distress is owing to shortening of the tendon attached to the heel, called the Achilles tendon, or of the muscles of the calf, of which it is an extension. If we examine the skeleton of a normal foot, we see that there are only three points of contact with the ground as the person stands: first the heel, second the front end of the first metatarsal bone (the long bone of the foot) where it joins the great toe and the third the front end of the fifth metatarsal bone where it joins the little toe.

There is, then, a longitudinal arch, the abutments of which are the heel and the extremities of the inner and outer metatarsal bones, and a lateral arch between the ends of the two metatarsal bones.

Most persons have heard of, and many have experienced, the troubles that come from the breaking down of the longitudinal arch, but few know of the lateral arch and the consequences of its sinking. The falling of the longitudinal arch results in a flat foot, or splay foot, in which the inner edge of the sole rests on the ground just as the outer edge does; the spring of the arch is broken, with the result that the normal relationship of all the little bones of the foot is disturbed, and thus there is pain. The pain may be acute, or it may be just a tired ache; it may not cease when the person is no longer standing or walking, but often continues for hours and even well into the night, seriously interfering with sleep. Sometimes the pain is worse in cases in which the arch is sunken only a little—probably owing to the fact that the bony part of the arch is weakened so that greater strain comes on the supporting ligaments.

The treatment consists in wearing shoes so constructed that the toes, especially the ends of the metatarsal bones, from which the toes spring, are not squeezed together, and also in wearing specially constructed arch supports,—not the ready-made ones sold in drug stores and ten-cent stores,—exercising by rising on the toes and douching with alternately hot and cold water, and placing an extra layer of leather on the inner side of the sole of the shoe so as to throw the weight on the outer side of the foot. It is unusually necessary to place a properly fitted pad on the anterior end of the arch support to prevent sagging of the lateral arch. When the Achilles tendon or the calf muscle is too short the muscle must be stretched by proper exercise or by a special form of apparatus. That is better than increasing the height of the heels, which gives momentary relief but leads in the end to a gradual increase of the trouble and in extreme cases even to clubfoot.

A NEW GAME

A new game, which always causes much amusement, is Fumy Faces. All the outfit required to play it is a table, a lamp, a pencil, a sheet of paper ruled in two-inch squares, an old newspaper and two or more fun-loving persons. An umpire may be useful but is not strictly necessary, for the winner can be determined by written voting slips. If an umpire is to decide who is the winner, he should not know the numbers that belong to the players.

Numbers corresponding to the number of persons playing are written on slips of paper and passed in a hat. The umpire sits apart from the players, who do not call out their numbers. Lay the sheet of paper on the table by the side of the lamp, crumple a piece of newspaper into a ball the size of a large marble, lay it at the side of a square near the lamp, so that the ball will cast a shadow in the centre of the square. Keep turning the ball, until it casts a shadow somewhat resembling a face. Outline the face with a pencil, add an eye, an ear, hair, a neck line, collar, or anything the player's fancy may suggest.

Anyone who has the faculty of putting in the extra touches, so as to accentuate the outline of the face, can get some exceedingly laughable results. Each player signs his number under his drawing, together with a title.

The player who draws the most amusing or striking portrait and names it most aptly wins the first prize.

Here and There

The Earl of Leitrim, Irish peer, who has been touring Canada, was much struck with the resemblance between north-west Ireland and the maritime provinces, with their wooded hills, sandy beaches and plenty of fish and game, as playgrounds for the tourist.

What is believed to be the largest salmon ever caught by hook and line in waters adjacent to Vancouver, B.C., was landed at Horseshoe Bay, Howe Sound, recently by A. C. Cohen. The fish measured four feet, one inch in length and weighed 64 pounds. It took 35 minutes to land it.

Irwin S. Cobb, the famous American humorist, has been hunting in the St. Maurice valley, served by Canadian Pacific lines. This is by no means his first trip to Canadian hunting and fishing centres, as he is a keen sportsman and has visited the wilds in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Among the passengers landing at Quebec from the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Scotland," recently was Miss Margaret Bondfield, M.P., a member of the Cabinet of the Macdonald Government of Great Britain. Miss Bondfield is in Canada to study conditions as they affect female immigrants.

Some interesting facts were made public by E. J. Belleisle, superintendent of the fish and game department of the Province of Quebec, when in Montreal recently. The province is now teeming with wild life, he says, mainly because of its conservation policy, whereby preserves are rented to fish and game clubs on the understanding that they appoint wardens. There are 500 such clubs employing a total of over 1,000 wardens.

The Trans-Canada Limited, crack transcontinental express of the Canadian Pacific Railway, completed its last run of the season on September 17th, and will not be operated again until next May. The train, which is the fastest long-distance express in North America, covered 758,748 miles in the season, or three times the distance between the earth and the moon, in its 238 runs, and carried the equivalent of 95,000 passengers for varying distances.

The new wing of the Chateau Lake Louise, the Canadian Pacific Railway's hotel at Lake Louise, one of the choicest beauty spots in the Rockies, is now under construction to replace that portion destroyed by fire some months ago. It will be a nine-storey, fire-proof, steel-frame structure of stucco, brick and stone, richly furnished in the best style of a mountain hotel, and will contain 280 bedrooms, bringing the total in the hotel up to 390.

The hunt for fur is extending northward each year, according to officials of the Hudson's Bay Company and Revillon Freres. They have already despatched their steamers on their annual tour of the northern posts which each season are being located farther and farther north as the field of the pelt hunters is extended into the Arctic. The Hudson's Bay Company now has a numerous chain of posts in Baffinland and other areas north of Hudson Strait.

After taking 1000 ZUTOO TABLETS Says they are Harmless

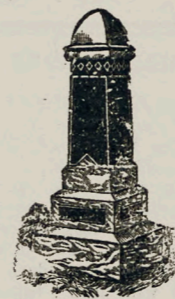

Mrs. (Dr.) Shurtleff, of Coaticook, says "I must have taken 1000 Zutoo Tablets. After trying every remedy within reach, I discarded them all four years ago for ZUTOO, which I have taken ever since. I find the tablets a harmless and efficient remedy for all kinds of headache." 25 cents per box—at all dealers.

COUNTY NEWS

MAXVILLE

Miss Gertrude M. Weegar who was visiting her parents for some weeks returned to Ottawa on Tuesday.

Services in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday were conducted by Rev. H. Cameron of Ottawa.

Mr. John G. Harkness, County Crown Attorney, presided at the Court of Revision of the Voters' Lists for the Plebiscite vote on the 23rd inst. This was held on Monday. Several names were added as well as several substituted.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Robertson, Ottawa, were recent guests of his uncle Mr. A. C. McIntyre, St. Elmo.

Quite a number from Maxville attended the Masonic Service in Williams-town on Sunday afternoon.

To-day (Friday) the Continuation School's Field Day is being held on the Exhibition Grounds. The inter-form cup for competition has been on exhibition in the window of the Hoople Block.

Mr. Jas. D. Grant is having a twenty five horse power Fairbanks Morse engine installed in his new building for grinding purposes.

Many of our citizens who do not frequent the C.N.R. depot are not aware that for the past several months the west end of the station grounds possessed a large flower bed of much beauty.

Among recent visitors was Mrs. J. Stewart Rayside of Montreal, who was a guest of her sister, Mrs. P. H. McEwen and other relatives.

After spending the summer at his home, Mr. Eben Franklin returned to Montreal this week to resume his studies at McGill University.

Miss Bertha McEwen of the Bell Telephone, Central Office, is enjoying her holidays.

Miss Mayme Franklin who was attending the Vankleek Hill Collegiate spent the week end with her mother, Mrs. H. J. Franklin.

A few days ago a would-be benefactor was greatly relieved when he ascertained that Mr. John A. Cameron, town clerk, had marriage licenses for sale.

Master James S. Calder left on Sunday morning for his home in Hamilton, Ont., after spending the past two months here, the guest of his aunt, Mrs. J. J. Urquhart.

Weeks may come and weeks may go but very few of them pass that do not record a large shipment of live stock by our cattle kings F. B. Villeneuve & Son. This week was no exception.

The cry goes forth—When? oh when! are we to witness a change in the condition of the road leading south from the town to McIntosh's corner? Any change would of necessity be for the better. Did we hear of $200 or $500 being apportioned for this work?

The annual thank offering meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church will be held on Wednesday, 8th inst., at 2 p.m. in the school room of the church when it is expected that Mrs. Hill of Ottawa will address the members.

It has been arranged that the cooking class under the auspices of the local branch of the Women's Institute will open at 2 p.m., Monday, 6th inst. Miss Kidd will have charge. It is also announced, that under the same auspices, a sewing class will shortly be formed for girls between 10 and 20 years of age. Intending students should give their names to any of the officers of the Institute.

After a pleasant visit with her parents here, Miss Eva McEwen has left for Chicago to which city she has been transferred by her employers after some time spent in New York and several of the Canadian cities. We all wish her well.

Mrs. Leonard McEwen and children of Russell, spent some days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McNaughton, Notfield Farm, who also had as a week end guest their daughter, Viola of the Bank of Nova Scotia, Ottawa.

Mr. Dale Moore M.A. who was student in charge of the Congregational Church, for the summer months, closed his ministry here on Sunday, and has returned to resume his studies at the Congregational College, Montreal. During his stay in Maxville, Mr. Moore made many warm friends who will cordially greet his return upon any or every occasion. At a meeting of the congregation held immediately after the morning service on Sunday, it was decided to continue to have student supply until the end of the year.

It will be recalled that some time ago the Women's Institute at considerable expense had four very artistic greeting signs placed at the town limits upon the four principal highways leading into Maxville. Only a few months passed when there wasn't a vestige of one of them left. They were knocked down and broken by the hands of vandals to whom nothing is sacred but their own depraved tastes. It is unfortunate that Society is cursed with such. We understand that the Ontario Motor League is forwarding four more signs and it may be well to know that any one who mutilates or destroys same is subject to a fine of fifty dollars.

There was an unusually large attendance at the meeting of the Women's Institute on Saturday, the day being designated as "grandmothers' day." There were quite a number present who had reached that happy estate and interest was added to the gathering by the collection of photographs of those grandmothers when they were children or young ladies. The deciphering of "who is who" in the New York social register would be a sinecure compared to the proper designation of the originals of these photos. Dr. A. T. Morrow's address on "Canada, her people and resources" was thoroughly enjoyed. The serving of refreshments brought this happy gathering to a close.

In the old days of political pull it was won and held on political grounds, with little reference to academic or practical fitness, but that stage passed and men were sought whose character, college training, and technical knowledge warranted their elevation to one of the most important positions in the province. Mr. McKillop has been for some years at the Brandon Experimental Farm and has commended himself as worthy for this high honour. He is a graduate of Guelph Agricultural college.

Speeding Motorists

Every man who travels the highways is not on an emergency trip. A few minutes would not make any difference in the most of cases, as far as business is concerned, but it certainly would make a lot of difference as far as safety is concerned. For instance the man or woman who starts out on a pleasure jaunt seldom has a set schedule for arriving any place. Usually they have all day, or all afternoon, or all evening at their disposal, and speed is by no means essential to their pleasure or safety. The Woodstock Sentinel Review suggests that the promoters of safety erect a few signs reading: "Why All the Hurry?" "Pause, Ponder, and Pull-Up"; "More Hurry Less Speed"; "Why Take Chances?" "Lose Five Minutes and Save Five or More Years"; "Watch Your Step by Taking Your Feet Off the Gas." and a few other similarly appropriate bits of advice to the speed demons. There may be a lot of poor drivers in the country, defective automobiles, and bad roads, but the majority of automobile accidents are caused through nothing but a craze for speed—unnecessary speed. When people begin to realize that need for hurry exists only in their own minds, there will be a very welcome reduction in the number of motor accidents.

WORLD EVENTS IN REVIEW

By William Banks

No Chance

Zaghloof Pasha, Premier of Egypt, after many weeks spent in Paris, has arrived in London to ask that Egypt be given control of the Sudan. His mission is pre-doomed to failure. Premier MacDonald has already made it clear that Britain is not in the mood to undo the good work under which the Sudan is making real progress.

Roumania's Difficult Task

Russia seemingly has dropped the idea of going to war just now to force Roumania to give up Bessarabia, formerly a Russian province. Bolsheviks, however, are conducting a persistent series of raids into Roumanian territory. This is one of the commonest of Soviet tricks for creating a situation of embarrassment to other nations while accepting no responsibility itself. Roumania is keeping strong forces under arms to deal with any outbreak or incursion of a more serious nature.

The Balance of Trade

Roger W. Babson, the famous United States economist and statistician, recently said that Canada's business position is greatly improved over that of a year ago, and is more favorable than that of his own country where the readjustment period had been temporarily halted. Almost simultaneously, Ottawa issued a report showing that Canadian exports for the twelve months ending August 31, totalled $1,060,105,482 with imports of $833,645,913. The latter is a decrease of $58,316,122 compared with the previous twelve months, while exports showed a gain of $58,917,908. The balance of trade in Canada's favor grows.

Western Harvest

The Canadian West has been favored on the whole with splendid weather for harvesting and the grain is moving to lake and seaports with great dispatch and regularity. Prices continue to show advances of thirty to forty-two cents a bushel higher than a year ago and the resultant benefit to the farmer should be reflected in very much improved business conditions throughout a large section of the country. Definite declaration that Russia is out of the grain exporting business this year is given in a government note, that in order to keep down prices the export of grain must cease. This is taken as one way of admitting that the Russian harvest this year is a poor one.

Britain's Navy and Peace

Britain has made it clear that she will not place her navy at the disposal of the League of Nations for the purpose of enforcing peace. If the economic weapons of the League fails when applied to that end, Britain might fight in a military sense under certain conditions. This declaration made by Hon. Arthur Henderson, the Home Secretary, at the league assembly relieved some anxiety in Britain caused by the reports that the navy was to be at the League's discretion as a coercive weapon. It now appears certain that compulsory arbitration will be decided upon by the League, and that its acceptance will be followed by an international conference on disarmament to be held in June.

Practical Examples

An experiment to be carried out by the Ontario Department of Agriculture involves the purchase of farms in different sections of the province, to prove to the rural community that the advanced methods of the Department make farming pay. The farms so selected will be those which have not made profits lately. If he so desires the owner of each of these farms may be the one to continue working it, but he must do so under the direction and instruction of the department's representative in his particular district. What is aimed at is to prove that the Department's ideas mean actual profits for farmers, and do not depend upon government grants or expenditures beyond the owner's means.

The Prince in Canada

The Prince of Wales is at last on his own Alberta ranch after a visit to the United States, which showed that he is as popular in that country almost as in any part of the British Empire. He will have a real holiday and rest in Canada. It is a tribute to our country's climatic and other conditions that he has selected a spot within its borders where he may not only relax from the hard work the position involves, but where he may also be a land owner and a raiser of cattle. Later on there will be some official functions in Ottawa and perhaps in Montreal and Toronto. But one may safely assume that the Prince's happiest hours in Canada will be spent in the comparative calm and quiet of the E. P. Ranch.

Canadian Financing

The new fifty million dollar refunding loan which will retire that amount of Victory Bonds maturing November 1, was snapped up within three hours of being placed on the Canadian market. The great financial institutions and the bond dealers were the purchaser and in turn they will sell to private investors. The significance of the quick disposal is held to lie in its proof of the soundness of Canada financially, and the certainty of an increasing demand for government bonds during the coming year. The debt of this country is still far too high, however, and the prime necessity is its reduction by the practise of wise economy, combined with persistently maintained effort to expand our trade.

British Elections Predicted

Again the prophets are predicting an election in Britain this Fall. Mr. Asquith's official declaration that he is with Mr. Lloyd George in opposition to the treaty with Russia is regarded as making the defeat of that project a certainty, as many Conservatives are also opposed. Despatches indicate that Premier MacDonald and his colleagues will refuse to amend the treaty in the face of Liberal threats but are hoping to reach an agreement with the Liberals which will obviate the necessity of an appeal to the people. Curiously enough Labor opinion in Britain regards the Russian treaty as offering a better chance for the revival of British trade than does the German reparation scheme. The latter indeed is held to constitute a real menace to British industry, especially to that of the coal and allied trades.

Air Line to Canada

It is declared that within the next few years a regular airship line between Britain and Canada with a bi-weekly service will be well established. The MacDonald government is credited with the decision to develop the airship as a commercial vehicle and the experts in the Old Land say that the trip to this country will easily be made in two and a half days. Two airships have already been ordered and the tentative arrangements call for a service which will also bring Australia within eleven days of London and other parts of the Empire within proportionate travelling time. If the Labor government has actually given its approval to such a plan there is little doubt that it will be carried out whatever the results of the predicted autumn election. Space and time are disappearing before the achievements of science.

First Home Bank Trial

Ocean G. Smith who was chief accountant of the defunct Home Bank, has been found guilty of negligence on three counts in making returns to the government in regard to the condition of the Bank. He will be sentenced soon. This is the first of eight trials of former officials and directors of the Bank to be disposed of in Toronto. The others will take up many weeks. The cases and the decisions will no doubt establish several precedents in respect to similar charges.

A Man of Mystery

At seventy-four years of age, Sir Basil Zaharoff, one of the richest men in the world, who began his career as a messenger boy in Constantinople, has married the Duchess of Marchena, who is a relative of the King of Spain. They will live in France. Zaharoff has played a wonderful role in European affairs since 1880, when he was instrumental in securing contracts from Turkey for British built war-ships and armaments. He is a tremendous shareholder in many British firms, as well as in European industrial concerns and has frequently financed whole nations in war and peace. He has been knighted by Britain and has received many honors from others of the Allied nations on whose behalf he was a powerful factor in financing and manufacturing during the great war. But he still remains a real man of mystery except to a very few of the great statesmen, diplomats and financiers of the world.

The Allied Debts

There has been some anxiety in British financial circles over reported negotiations between the United States and France for the funding of the latter's debt on much more generous terms than were granted to Britain. The latter has paid over one hundred million dollars on her debt to the U.S. and finds that instead of growing less it has grown larger. That is because the exchange rate has been against her. Little real progress will be made until sterling more nearly approaches par. That may not be so long delayed now. If the United States should grant better terms to France than to Britain, that would be a discrimination of a particularly offensive kind against the only one of the Old World allies that has shown the slightest appreciation of the situation and has made an honest attempt to liquidate her obligations. Such action is unlikely without including Britain in the terms of the arrangement. France, Italy, and other of the allies owe enormous sums to Britain and there is little prospect of their being paid. At the same time France has had a preference in the payments from Germany, and still has the best of that arrangement.

TRADE AT HOME

The merchants of the enterprising town of Barrie are carrying on a "Buy-at-Home Campaign," with good results. The Examiner published in that town, last week referred to the campaign, in part, as follows:—

The trade-in-Barrie educational campaign being conducted by forty-one progressive Barrie merchants and citizens in The Examiner is creating much favorable comment.

Every citizen is in accord with the motto, "Build Up Barrie." This can best be done by buying all goods possible at home from Barrie merchants. In all cases every citizen of Barrie should give Barrie merchants an opportunity to match price and quality with outside sources. Money kept at home means prosperity for Barrie.

Barrie merchants carry over $1,000,000 worth of merchandise and can supply practically any want immediately. The buyer can personally select his requirements from a large assortment.

Buy in Barrie and help make your neighbor more prosperous. Your neighbors help pay taxes for schools, paved streets, public buildings, parks and all public improvements.

A prosperous community means prosperous individuals through more business and increasing property values. Barrie is already one of the best towns in all Canada. Help build up Barrie by buying in Barrie what you require and by so doing you will really be building prosperity for yourself.

Progress or Reaction Ontario Electors Must Choose

THE issue of the Plebiscite of October 23rd is: Shall the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage continue to be prohibited, or the traffic be re-established and conducted by the Government? Since September 16th, 1916, the legalized sale of liquor for beverage purposes has been prohibited. During eight years the Ontario Temperance Act has wrought a moral, social and economic transformation, gradual but real. A new generation knows nothing of the evils of the liquor traffic before the O. T. A. came into force. Older generations may have forgotten. Think of it! There is not a man or woman 29 years of age who has legally seen the inside of a bar-room or liquor shop in the Province of Ontario. Booze is banned! It is a discredited and dishonored outlaw. Now, it wants to come back. It seeks not only re-instatement, but that the Government itself shall be an active partner.

Do You Remember?

The old-time Bar-Room and Liquor Shop, with their disgusting sights and sounds and smells;

The staggering, cursing, drunken men who jostled us on the streets and on the cars—particularly on holidays or at public demonstrations—and who filled our jails;

The poor, battered, bedraggled hulks of men and women—God's children, our brothers and sisters, every one of them;

The destitution, misery, wretchedness, squalor, filth and disorder in many hovels that might, and should, have been homes;

The vice, the immorality, the crime, the debauchery, incited by liquor, that appalled good citizens.

The O.T.A. Has Made Good

Contrast those conditions with the situation today. The Ontario Temperance Act has brought immeasurable improvement. Drunkenness has decreased. Crime has been lessened. Homes are happier. Children have been given a better chance. Savings Bank deposits have increased. All down the line, PROGRESS has been written into the history of Old Ontario!

OFFICIAL RECORDS PROVE ALL THIS!

The following table shows that, in Ontario under the O. T. A., there has been a substantial decrease in the offences that are usually associated with drink:

Assaults	1914	1922
	1,627	756
Cruelty to Animals	1,172	256
Vagrancy	4,703	1,507
Keeping and Frequenting Bawdy Houses	802	352
Loose, Idle and Disorderly Drunkenness	6,411	1,736
	17,703	10,063

NOTE THE OPINION OF OUR MANUFACTURERS:

"Does Prohibition, under the O. T. A., result in more comfortable homes and better supplies of food and clothing for wives and children?"

When this question was asked of leading Ontario manufacturers by the Ontario Board of License Commissioners, 1,165, or 82 per cent., answered "Yes", while only 239, or 17 per cent., said "No".

All Systems of Government Sales Have Failed

So-called "Government Control" has proven a dismal failure wherever tried. Drinking, drunkenness and bootlegging have reached appalling proportions. Every Canadian Province that has tried any form of "Government Sale" has already learned a hard lesson.

Take BRITISH COLUMBIA: Hon. H. H. Stevens, M.P., in a public address in Vancouver recently, declared:

"Never, in the history of the country, was bootlegging comparable in magnitude and murderous results to what it is today."

Or, MANITOBA: Figures furnished by the Chief of Police of Winnipeg show an increase of 45 per cent. in the number of drunk and disorderly cases in the first five months under Government Sale, as compared with the corresponding five months of the previous year under Prohibition.

And, finally, QUEBEC: The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Presbytery of Montreal, April 15th, 1924:

"That we regard it to be a patriotic duty to make it known that the drug traffic flourishes here as never before and is on the increase, bootlegging flourishes in and from this Province as never before, that drunkenness is on the increase and that the Quebec system of Government Control is socially injurious and not a success."

Ontario Must Hold the Line

If a majority vote for "continuance", it means that we will have a better law more effectively enforced, with correspondingly improved results. The Government, through the Prime Minister, has definitely pledged itself to "strengthen" the Act and "give it active and vigorous enforcement".

If a majority vote for "Sale", it means the re-establishment of the old, discredited Liquor Traffic, in the guise of respectability under a system that makes the Government the bartender and every citizen a partner, acting as sales agent for the brewers and distillers and making profit for them out of the destruction of life and happiness.

The Ontario Plebiscite Committee, uniting the temperance forces of Ontario, calls upon all who love their Province and wish its continued and increasing prosperity and the happiness of its people to VOTE FOR THE LAW that has accomplished immeasurable good, and not for a return of the traffic that has wrought such havoc in the past, and would do it again.

Advertisers who receive matrices of their merchandise from their manufacturers or wholesalers can bring them to us and we will make cuts for use in their advertising.

This service, we are confident, will result in greatly increased business for every advertiser who takes advantage of it.

You will be better able to tell the people of Glengarry and vicinity about what you have to sell or what you want to buy.

And you can put your message across in a concise, easily-understood manner that will be pleasing to readers of The Glengarry News and most satisfactory to you in the greater results obtained.

THE GIRL NEXT DOOR

—BY—

RUBY M. AYRES

AUTHOR OF "RICHARD CHATTERTON, V.C." ETC.

It's especially hard on a girl like Joy, you know," he said presently. "All heart and impulse, she is. What's to become of her I'd like to know! She'll run off, and one day when things seem a bit harder than usual, she'll marry the first good-looking, plausible man that comes along and regret it for the rest of her life."

I found my voice then. "You seem to have made up your mind about... Don... I thought you still believed he was living."

He swung round. "So I do, but what's that got to do with it? Joy will never marry him now—she told me herself. If ever he comes back I shall tell him the truth—that's what she said."

"What does she mean—the truth?" I asked jerkily. I knew, but I wanted to hear it again. I wanted to hear exactly what she had said.

"That she cares for another man," said old Jardine promptly. "A good-looking St. Anthony of a man, who can't see that his happiness lies in her hands; who can't see..."

I turned on him, the hot blood rushing to my face.

"What do you mean—St. Anthony?" I asked angrily. "Who the devil are you calling St. Anthony, I should like to know?"

Old Jardine sighed and smiled together.

"You, my boy," he said whimsically. "Now don't be annoyed, and don't think I'm blaming you. You can't help not caring for her, poor child. As I say, these things cannot be controlled, but, all the same, I can't understand it—for the life of me I can't understand it. If I were twenty years younger now..."

So he did not guess after all! Did not suspect that if Joy cared at all for my unworthy self, I cared a thousand times more for her... I turned away to hide the tell-tale blood that rushed to my face. Perhaps it was as well to let him think as he did; and yet, surely it could not be what she thought too? Surely after that night in the garden she must have known—must have felt that I loved her?

I found my voice in a strangled sort of way.

"She seems to have made a very complete confidant of you," I said. Old Jardine shook his grey head.

"Well, I'm fond of her," he answered, "very fond of her, and she knows it. I'd give a great deal to see her happily settled in life, a great deal. She wants a sheet-anchor, a girl like that. If she doesn't get one she'll drift. That old scoundrel of a father of hers now..."

"Yes," said I as he paused.

"He wanted to palm her off on young Roger," Jardine went on angrily. "No sooner did he hear the news of your poor boy than he was looking round for another with money. He'd have liked to have got hold of Roger, too—heaps of money there for the old scamp to pay his creditors with."

"And—Joy?" I asked. "What did she say?"

"Refused, point blank, of course. 'I've made one mistake,' she said to me, 'and I'm not going to make another.' Then she laughed! You know her way! Poor child—poor child!"

There was a little silence.

"She's twenty-one, and I'm nearly forty," I said, trying to speak indifferently. "In ten years time she'll look back and laugh at herself that she ever gave me a thought."

I said it deliberately to draw him. I wanted to know what he really thought. I wanted him to go on talking about her.

But old Jardine had apparently said all he meant to say. He sat back in his armchair, his head a little sunk on his breast.

"When I came in," I said with an effort, "you were saying that things were bound to come right some day. I know it's a favourite saying of yours, but—what things?"

Old Jardine moved his hands deprecatingly.

"Life, happiness, things in general!" he explained. "Things would come right for her, for instance, if she could get over her infatuation, love—call it what you like—for you." He paused. "Or if you, he went on, "suddenly woke up to the fact that there was no need for her to wish to get over it."

There was a good-humored sort of irony in his voice.

"And supposing such a thing were to happen?" I asked quietly. "And then—supposing one day Don walks in—as I hope to God he will!"

Old Jardine did not answer at once; then he said:

"I say Amen to that prayer, and let the rest take care of itself."

"And in the meantime," I said presently, "what is to become of Joy? You say her father has deserted her—"

Jardine cleared his throat.

"She's coming here," he said, "to live with me."

"Here!"

"Yes—I'm an old man—she might be my granddaughter. Nobody can say anything if I like to have her here to keep house for me and bring back a little of the sunshine I lost when she went away," and he looked again at his wife's portrait.

"Well—" he demanded, as I did not speak. "What have you got to say?"

"Only that it's kind—generous—just like you."

Old Jardine said, "Tut, tut! Bosh and rubbish! It's entirely selfish. I want her to come a great deal more than she wants to come, I'll be bound. Have some more whisky..."

Yes, she would be alright with him, I knew, and I should still be able to see her sometimes. That was my one thought as I walked home. I should still be able to see her and hear her voice and her laugh; and if that was all I could ever hope for—if Don came back—well, it would be something, after all.

St. Anthony, old Jardine had called me. I almost laughed as I thought of it. There was not much of the St. Anthony in the man who had kissed Joy Lambert in the garden that night, or in the man who walked home now; his pulses throbbing at the thought of the things she had told old Jardine, and of the unspoken things I had read in her eyes as they looked at me for that second through her tears before she fled from the room.

Supposing Don never came back... a cruel thought that kept intruding upon me mercilessly, though I tried with all my strength to push it away. I wanted him back—night and day it was my one prayer and hope that he would come back, a hope with every passing hour lost a little of its strength, a little of its steadfastness.

If he came back if one day he walked in and put his head round my study door as he used to do and said:

"Hello, sir, here I am!" in his well remembered voice, I knew it would be the happiest moment of my life, and yet... from that moment, too, I should have to look for ever the door which was already closed against the woman I loved.

Don loved her, and that was enough; if he was living I would die rather than raise a finger to take her from him.

"Unless it is really necessary I don't want to see you, and I don't think it can be..." The quaint wording of her little note came back to me in all its paths; I opened the drawer where I had hidden it, and read it through again. What had she done with the note I sent her, I wondered? It seemed impossible she had not been able to guess all that my heart had written between the lines.

But she had told old Jardine I did not care for her; I had seen for myself the agony of shame in her eyes when they met mine that morning, and a great longing rose in me to be able to make her understand, to tell her just once that it was for Don's sake alone that I kept away from her, for his sake only.

To write to her, to say something that would take away the terrible hurt to her pride, and make things easier for us both to bear; it was intolerable that she should think I did not suffer with her.

And then, almost before I was aware of it, I began to write, and the words that had seemed so difficult to find yesterday came easily enough to-day, and I wrote:

"My dear Joy,—You once called me a dear, honourable man. Perhaps I was not deserving of it then, but will you try to understand me when I say that I am struggling hard to deserve it now? There are many things which I must not say to you, except in my heart, but perhaps some day life will be kind to us both and find a way for me to tell them to you without having allowed me to behave dishonourably a second time to the one who trusted us both."

I meant to send that letter; it seemed to me that I had every right to send it, for her sake, if not for my own.

For I knew that what was grieving her most was the belief that I did not care.

I had folded what I had written and slipped it into an envelope, when Castle came to the door.

"The post, sir—just come."

She laid a letter down on my desk and went away. I glanced at it casually—it bore a French censor's stamp, and I knew the handwriting to be that of the commander of Don's squadron, to whom I had written several times. I opened it slowly. More sorrowful business to be attended to, I supposed; another drag on the wheel of hope, and this is what I read:

"Dear Mr. Buchanan,—Just a hurried line to tell you that Don is safe and as well as can be expected after a marvelous escape from the enemy lines. He has got a shattered leg, but insists that it is nothing. I saw him in hospital this afternoon, and he made me promise that I would write and tell you he was looking splendid. He is sending you details himself as soon as he is able, but wanted you to be told as soon as possible that he is not 'pushing up the daisies'—they are his own words. Needless to say, we are all delighted to have him back—Yours very sincerely, A. B. Knight, Squadron Commander."

CHAPTER XIX

I suppose one's first feeling after hearing news either of great joy or grief is that it cannot possibly be true; and for a moment I stood petrified, with Knight's letter in my hand; then I gave a great shout and rushed pell-mell to find Castle.

I caught her round the waist just as I had so often seen Don do when anything very much excited him.

"He's alive!" I yelled at her. "Mr. Don! alive and well; read it—read it for yourself..." I thrust the letter into her hand and did a war dance on my own round the kitchen table, while she labouriously deciphered Knight's hurried epistle.

Then, as, of course, I knew she would do, she burst into tears.

I patted her on the back and told her not to be silly.

"There's nothing to cry for. Laugh, woman, laugh! and thank God that he's safe, and that we shall see him again."

I felt like a schoolboy in my own unutterable relief and joy; I should see him again, I should grip him by the hand again, and hear his cheery voice saying: "Well here I am, you see, sir."

It was almost worth the weeks of agonised suspense to live through this moment. As I walked back to the study I found myself light-heartedly whistling a snatch of Don's song:

"Oh, oh, oh! it's a lovely war..."

It was a lovely war at that moment, for me at all events; it had taken years off my shoulders, a ton weight from my heart.

I went over to my desk to write to Knight at once, and my eyes fell on my own unsealed letter to Joy...

It was like a blow over the heart, and a cold sort of sensation seemed to steal through my body as I slowly drew what I had written from its envelope.

"...Perhaps some day life will be kind to us, and find a way for me to tell them to you, without having allowed me to behave dishonourably a second time to the one who trusted us both..."

A vain wish now! A dead hope! With one hand life had given me back something that was very precious only to rob with the other of something equally precious if in a different way.

I could never send that letter now. I laid it down on the desk beside the one that had just come from France, and looked at them both with dazed eyes.

It was as if someone had put them both into the scales of Fate and not waited to hear my wishes or choice.

And yet, had I been asked, should I have chosen otherwise than that which Fate had chosen for me? I knew that I should not...

Castle came to the door.

"If you please, sir, Miss Joy has just called out over the wall to know if anything is the matter..." She laughed rather shakily. "I suppose she heard the noise you were making," she added. Then a little anxious gleam filled her eyes as they rested on me.

"I suppose it is true, Mr. David?" she asked anxiously. "I suppose Mr. Don really is safe? It's not—not a joke?"

"People don't joke over things like that," I said. "Where—where is Miss Joy?"

"Still leaning over the wall. I didn't dare go out and let her see me in case she should guess—so I came for you first, sir."

"I'll go and tell her," I said.

I put my own letter away in the drawer that contained the one short note I had ever received from Joy and went out into the garden.

She was there, her arms resting on the top of the fence and her face turned anxiously towards the house. The sleeves of her cotton frock were gored back to the elbow showing her slim arms, and when she saw me she said hastily:

"I didn't know you were in, but I heard Castle crying, so I thought—I mean, I wondered—if anything was the matter."

"Nothing's the matter," I answered quickly, "but good news—wonderful news..."

"Don?"

"Yes."

Her eyes went to the letter I carried, and she stretched out her hand for it, and there followed a little silence which was very tragic to me while she read it.

Then she drew in a quick breath. "I am very glad," she said, "very happy—for your sake."

"Yes," I answered, "I am happy, too."

And then we looked at one another for a long moment, and I hope—oh, I hope with all my heart!—that she understood something of what I felt and which I did not dare to put into words. But if she did she gave no sign. Her face was a little pale, a little sad, and after a moment she said, glancing down at her bare arms:

"I'm afraid I am very untidy. I was busy. There is a great deal to do before I can leave the house."

"I am glad you are going to live with Mr. Jardine," I said.

"Are you?" The ghost of a smile crossed her face.

"I am sure Don will be glad, too," I went on with an effort. "Why, we shall be having him home again soon."

"I hope he will not have to suffer much," she said, but the words sounded perfunctory, and not at all as if Don were of more than passing interest to her. She turned her eyes to me. "You see," she said slowly, "he did not send me any message."

I tried to find excuses for him.

"He is ill—I am sure he is much more than he will admit. But he is going to write—you see what the letter says."

"Yes," she agreed; "but it doesn't say anything about writing to me, does it? Not that I mind exactly. Don't think I am jealous of you."

"I never thought that," I said.

She began to slowly unroll one of her turned-up sleeves, pulling it down and buttoning it round her wrist.

"I suppose you will go to France to see him, if they will let you?" she said presently.

I had not thought of such a thing, and said so.

"Oh, but I expect you will," she said. "So it will be some time before I see you again."

"There has been no suggestion of such a thing," I answered hurriedly. "And I am very sure I shall not be allowed to go to France unless Don is very much worse than this letter says he is."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh, well! she said indifferently, "we shall see. I must go; I've got a lot to do."

She turned to jump down, but I spoke her name quickly:

"Joy!"

"Well!" but she did not look at me.

"I should like to hear you say that you are glad—for your own sake," I said with difficulty. "I hope—I am sure that when Don comes back it will mean the beginning of great happiness for you both."

She looked at me then; she turned round and looked at me as if she were trying to read my very soul, but she made no attempt to answer, and after a moment she jumped down, and I heard her light steps running across the grass towards the house.

I went back indoors, trying to think only of Don and the good news I had received. I tried brutally hard to shut Joy out of my thoughts and out of my heart, but what was the use?

One cannot forget because one wishes to do so.

I walked down to old Jardine and told him what had happened, and though, of course, he was delighted, there was a sort of dismay in his eyes.

"And Joy—she knows?" he asked directly.

"Yes, I told her at once."

"What did she say?"

"She said she was very glad."

Old Jardine said "Humph!" Then he held out his hand and gripped mine. "Well, I am, too," he said heartily. "I don't know when I was so pleased about anything. You deserve to get the boy back, 'pon my word, you do, Buchanan."

"It's an enormous relief," I said. "Even now I can hardly believe that someone isn't trying to hoax me; after all these weeks of anxiety... I'd almost given up hope."

Old Jardine said "Humph!" again; he walked a pace from me and came back. "She always knew he'd turn up," he said abruptly.

"She? What do you mean?"

"Joy—she knew! Bless your heart, don't women always seem to know these things by instinct? She did, anyway."

He looked at me shrewdly. "Well, and what about it?" he asked.

I shook my head.

"Nothing," I protested. "Only... I don't see how she could have known..."

(To be Continued)

THE O.T.A. PLEBISCITE

"Prohibition" and "Government Control."

The term "Government Control" is not one which correctly describes the system commonly referred to under that name by both parties, because the principle of control by the Government is already strongly enshrined in all our legislation dealing with the sale and consumption of alcoholic liquors. Perhaps there is no piece of legislation in which it is more securely fixed and by which it is more forcibly expressed than in the Ontario Temperance Act itself, and any aspect of the Liquor Problem which that Act does not attempt to control is one which only our Constitution renders immune from Provincial legislation.

Objection can also be taken to applying the term "Prohibition" to the Ontario Temperance Act. It is not, nor does it pretend to be a completely prohibitive piece of legislation; although compared with the Act which it supplanted it undoubtedly is drastic. It, however, does not prohibit the consumption of alcoholic beverages in private dwelling houses, nor the purchase of wines of however high alcoholic strength provided they are made in the Province.

Care has therefore been exercised so as to avoid confusion regarding these terms "Government Control" and "Prohibition," but if the general principles underlying the arguments of both parties in the forthcoming plebiscite be understood the words used to describe them are not very important. The issue is after all chiefly one as to the extent and effect of the control exercised by the Government. One side says, in substance, that control to the point of completely prohibiting by law the manufacture, sale and use of alcoholic beverages would be feasible and of good effect. The other side in the same way retorts that the ideal of complete prohibition is impossible since alcohol can be so easily and cheaply made and that a completely prohibitory law only applies to the decent citizen who does not over-indulge and will not break the law, and practically leaves unrestricted the access to liquor for those whose appetites are unrestrained, and whose respect for law is little—in other words that prohibition applies to those who do not need and not to those who do.

In this discussion it has been stated that notwithstanding the drastic penalties of the O. T. A. its provisions are flagrantly broken, and many thoughtful men and women have been puzzled whether, if this be so, and the Police Court reports would seem to support the contention—the provisions of a Government Control Act would be any better respected. Reference to the Police Courts has been made, but this is not perhaps the best sort of proof, for numerous as have been the cases brought before our Judges, they represent only a small proportion of the breaches of the Act. Each reader of this column can ask himself how many cases of law infraction he has observed, if not actually participated in, since the O. T. A. came into force. And here emerges one of the greatest difficulties facing all kinds of restrictive legislation. No matter how strongly opposed a man may be to alcoholic beverages he will always hesitate to invoke the penalties of the law against his father, his son, his brother or even his neighbor, when the unlawful act is not a sinful one and the law broken is excessively restrictive or prohibitive in its nature. This is one reason given by the advocates of Government Control in asking a relaxation of some of the provisions of the Temperance Act. It is all very well, they say, to legislate for strangers, and provide heavy punishments for them but will you abide by all the provisions of the Act yourself, and will you be ready to hand over those of your family and friends who may break it? This question provides the answer to this query of our thoughtful citizens mentioned above. More powerful than control by Act of Parliament without the support of every man and woman. At present because the law prohibits reasonable means of access to alcoholic beverages breach of the law especially when made by friends is tolerantly regarded. It must not be expected, however, that under a new system bootlegging would instantly cease. Rather what would probably happen is that the present underground traffic would be gradually brought to the surface and thus eradicated.

Many people, however, who have been deeply interested in social improvement have regretted that recent years have brought about the abandonment of what was, and is, after all, the solution of this Liquor Problem. Reference is made to the inculcation in our children and even in our grown-ups of the principle of self-control, which renders all State control unnecessary. Too much stress has been laid on what the law can do—although in every field of human observation are to be seen the failures of the law—and not enough on what the individual can and ought to do for himself. The promotion of temperance is as much a crying need to-day as it was twenty years ago, and they are only sowing disappointment who trust in the operation of law alone. While the views of the prohibitionist are important consideration must never be denied for the rights of those who are not willing to impose total abstinence on themselves and object to having it done by others. That this has underlain many of the votes cast in other Provinces is demonstrated by the fact that only a very small proportion of those who voted for Government Control took out permits to purchase liquor. The significance of this is striking.

THE O.T.A. PLEBISCITE BALLOT

- 1 Are you in favour of the continuance of the Ontario Temperance Act?
2 Are you in favour of the sale as a beverage of beer and spirituous liquor in sealed packages under Government control?

This is the exact form of ballot that will be used by Ontario voters in deciding the fate of the Ontario Temperance Act on October 23. A cross opposite the question to which the voter gives assent constitutes a valid vote. Two crosses, one opposite each question, nullifies it, according to Attorney-General Nickle's statement recently.

Pretty Autumn Wedding

MACDONALD-RIGBY

On Monday morning, Sept. 22nd, a very pretty wedding took place at St. John's Church, Kingston Road, Toronto, when Rev. Father Williams united in matrimony Mary Agnes Rigby of Moore Park, Preston, England, and John Hugh (son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Duncan A. Macdonald of Greenfield.

The bride who was given away by Mr. Wm. Murphy was charmingly gowned in ivory georgette trimmed with silver ruching ribbon and lillies of the valley, with silver shoes and stockings and white georgette hat. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and baby's breath. Miss Marion Macdonald, sister of the groom, assisted as bridesmaid and looked pretty in a frock of peach and coral georgette, black velvet hat with mount of contrasting shades and carried an armful of gladioli. The groom was supported by his cousin, Mr. Bennie Macdonald of Greenfield.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Leslie Howard, Patricia Drive, who received the guests, wearing a gown of powder blue crepe and was assisted by her sisters, Mrs. H. Wagstaffe in a French model of lavender Canton and Miss Lillian Macdonald in canary crepe de chine.

The house was beautifully decorated with autumn flowers. Following the reception the happy couple left amid showers of confetti, for Muskoka Lakes on an extended honeymoon. The bride travelled in a navy satin faced Canton dress, black hat and sand wrap.

The groom's gift to the bride was a sterling silver embroidered meshbag; to the bridesmaid a string of pearls and to the groomsmen gold cufflinks.

Quite All Right

When riding near a farm orchard two city motorists stopped the car, stepped out, climbed the wall and gathered half a peck of rosy apples. To complete the "joke" they slowed down as they went by the farmhouse and called out to the proprietor. "We helped ourselves to your apples, old man. Thought we'd tell you." "Oh, that's all right," the farmer called back, I helped myself to your tools while you were in the orchard."
