Graduation Exercises Hotel Dieu, Cornwall

(Standard-Freshholder)
Graced by the presence of His Excellency Right Rev. On the platform, which was beautiful with flowers, the gifts of friends to the graduates, were seated His Excellency, the chairman, George E. Brennan, B.A.; Dr. Fred W. Previous to the conferring of diplomas, Pontifical Benediction had been pronounced in St. Joseph's Chapel by the bishop, from which the Reverend Sisters of the Religious Hospitaliers of St. Joseph, the graduates the alumnae of 1931, and the student nurses marched to the Assembly Hall, the professional march being played by a seven piece orchestra.

Upon the recital in usison by the graduates, of the Florence Nightingale pledge, His Excellency presented diplomas to six lay graduates and three members of the Hospitaliers. The Superior, Rev. Mother St. Patrick, assisted by Rev. Sister McDonald, pinned the badge of a graduate on each.

On May 24th, ulto., Mrs. Rod. McKenzie, of Plenty, Sask., but formerly of Dunvegan, Glengarry, mother of Mrs. Nell McDonald, Alexandria; celebrated her 80th birthday and on that occasion a number of her lady friends assembled at her home to tender their felicitations.

The afternoon was pleasantly spent in song and story, a pleasing feature being a recitation by another ex-Glen garran, Mrs. Mulloy, who also was from Dunvegan.

A delicious supper was served by the ladies, a birthday cake with eighty candles, was cut and a happy time enjoyed over the tea cups.

Mrs. McKenzie was the recipient of many gifts including flowers, fruit and candy and the following address was read:
Dear Mrs. McKenzie:

May coming years be kind to you And banish every care.
You are eighty this happy day, And still you're good and gay,
God send you sunshine of the bright est ray
That will chase all clouds away.
Your friends in Plenty.

Paper Read For Members of S. D. & G. Historical Society

The regular meeting of the Society was held in Alexander Hall, Wednesday evening last. The President, Mr. P. E. Campbell, who with the Secretary Treasurer, Mr. F. D. MacLennan and a party of some twenty-five members, ladies and gentlemen, had motored from Cornwall, occupied the chair.

After the adoption of the minutes of the last meeting, the President explained the reason for holding this meeting, in Glengarry—it was felt that interest of the history of the three counties would be greater if meetings were held at intervals in centres outside of Cornwall.

A paper was read by the Rev. Ewen J. Macdonald on Glengarry, St. Regis and Rev. Roderick Macdonell, 1782-83. It was listened to with pleasure by the visiting members and by those in this district who attended. The Rev. Father promised to submit his paper for publication at a later date. He was assured by the chairman that papers read are all preserved in the archives of the Historical Society of Canada.

Rev. Mr. Faulds of Knox Church moved a vote of thanks to the speaker of the evening, in a kind and sympathetic manner. Mr. Caldwell graciously seconded the vote.

Lacrosse

ST. ANDREWS 12—ALEXANDRIA 5
Last Saturday night our boys met St. Andrew's on a regular league fixture on the local grounds losing the game by a score of 12-5 before a disappointed but keen crowd of about 400 fans. In justice to the team, it must be said that they did not play up to their usual form. Their passing and checking was not as brilliant as that in the game on the previous Monday. Furthermore it must be taken into consideration that the St. Andrew's team were much improved having been strengthened by the addition of six Cornwall players and in the future the other teams in the league will have to reckon with this strong aggregation and we expect they will get the same surprise that Alexandria evidently got.

The game was not rough although St. Andrews players spent 19 minutes in the penalty box, while Alexandria's total was 15 minutes, most of the penalties being occasioned by a new rule which gives a penalty for any hard checking about the arms, legs or body. The scorers for St. Andrews were Heagle 5, Jamieson 2, Petepiece, Magwood, Fraser, Stewart, Lawson, one each, while F. McCormick with 2, B. Macdonell, W. Macdonell and R. Morris, with one each were the local sharpshooters.

The line up—
St. Andrews—Kinghorn; McDonald Petepiece, Fraser, Lawson, Heagle and Jamieson, Subs, Joyce, Stewart, Magwood and Mason.
Alexandria—P. Brunet, W. Morris, M. Pilon, A. McDonald, W. Macdonell, B. Macdonell and R. Morris. Subs, Marcoux, McCormick, Gagnier, O'Brien and A. Campbell.
Referee—Vincent McDonald, St. Andrews; Judge of Play—H. A. Gauthier Alexandria.

Fire at Lancaster

Early Monday morning the frame combination store and residence, the property of Peter Gillette, Main St., Lancaster, was destroyed by fire and considerable damage done to the McRae Hotel building. Fearing its spreading through the business section a call for assistance was sent to Cornwall and here. Instructions were given for the despatch of the chemical engine manned by Deputy Chief Courville and firemen Geo. Lalonde and U. Leecompte and the trip was made in quick order. Upon arrival they found the blaze was well under control but they assisted materially in the final subduing of the fire. The cause of the fire has not been determined.

Attractive June Weddings

A charming summer wedding took place at St. Finnan's Cathedral, on Saturday, June 18th, at nine o'clock, when Barbara Irene, daughter of the late Archibald McPhee, and of Mrs. McPhee, became the bride of Mr. Angus Edward MacDonald, son of the late Dan John MacDonald and of Mrs. MacDonald. The ceremony which was performed by Rev. W. B. MacCallum took place under an arch of roses and evergreen set on the spacious lawn of the bride's home.

Mendelssohn's Wedding March was effectively rendered by Miss Helen McCallum.

After the signing of the register the guests repaired to the dining room where a sumptuous repast was served after which Mr. and Mrs. MacRae left on a motor trip amid showers of confetti, good wishes and happy music, the latter being played by Mr. D. A. Fletcher of Dunvegan, cousin of the bride.

The bride's mother wore a gown of midnight blue georgette with touches of beige lace and a corsage of roses.

A PERSONAL MATTER

The progress which has been achieved during recent years in the conquest of disease has been made possible through the accumulation of scientific knowledge concerning the cause or manner of spread of certain diseases. Diseases such as typhoid fever and cholera are practically non-existent where water and milk supplies are safeguarded. Proper diet banishes scurvy and rickets. We have available the means whereby we can be successfully armed against smallpox and diphtheria. The application of our knowledge of infant care has reduced infant mortality.

There are many diseases concerning the cause of which we know little or nothing, and we are therefore unable to prevent or to control them. We do know, however, how to treat some of these diseases successfully and so reduce the number of deaths which they cause. In general, it may be said that such treatment must be given early in the course of the disease if it is to be of real value.

Diseases which cannot be prevented but which can be cured by early adequate treatment are entirely a personal matter. It rests with the individual to secure the treatment required early in the disease. It is necessary for each one to have a sufficient understanding of these diseases because they are a personal matter, purely individual diseases. We notice that appendicitis takes an unnecessary toll of human lives year after year. The reason for this is failure to secure early treatment. The pain in the abdomen caused by appendicitis is not considered to be of any significance, and, worst of all, it is often treated with a laxative which leads to disaster.

Cancer is another disease which in many cases could be cured if treated early. It is because we fail to pay attention to sores which do not heal, to persistent or growing lumps, to unusual discharges or bleeding, or to chronic indigestion, that cancer cases so often come too late to the doctor's attention.

Pain is a danger signal, and pain should never be disregarded. Appendicitis causes pain, but cancer (and this is the most important point) does not, as a rule, cause pain in its early stages, at the time when it may be cured by proper treatment.

It is obvious that the responsibility in such cases rests with the individual. Neither the public health department nor the medical profession can take the responsibility over. It is a personal matter, first and last.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

CHEMICAL WEED KILLERS PROVE MOST EFFECTIVE

Farmers, gardeners and others are looking for an easy and effective way of destroying small patches of perennial weeds.

The Department of Botany at the O.A.C. has been experimenting with chemical weed killers for the past four years. The results obtained from these experiments would warrant making the following statements regarding the destruction of small patches of weeds.

Field bindweed and twitch grass may be killed by three applications of atlaide, weed cop or sodium chlorate. The strength required are 1 pound per gallon of water of atlaide or weed cop per 100 square feet, or 1 pound per gallon of water of sodium chlorate per 400 square feet. The first application should be given when the weeds are in full bloom, the second three weeks later, and the third a month later.

Blue-weed and burdock can be killed by one application of sodium chlorate at the rate of 8 ounce per gallon of water per 400 square feet and by one application of atlaide or weed cop at the rate of 1 pound per gallon of water per 100 square feet. The first application may be made as soon as the plants leaf out, and a second spraying with the solution given if the plants begin to leaf out again in three or four weeks time.

Perennial sow thistle may be destroyed by two or three applications of atlaide or weed cop, the rate of application being 2 pounds per gallon of water per 100 square feet. The first application should be given just as the thistle commences to bloom, the second three weeks later, and if new growth appears another application of the same strength should be given.

Paths and miniature golf courses can be kept free from grass and weeds by one application of atlaide at the rate of 3 pounds per gallon of water per 100 square feet, or 2 pounds of formite per 5 gallons of water per 100 square feet.

Ox-eye daisy and wild carrot may be destroyed by one application of atlaide or weed cop at the rate of 1 pound per gallon of water per 100 square feet, by one application of sodium chlorate at the rate of 1 pound per gallon of water per 400 square feet. The applications should be made just as these weeds are coming into flower.

Sodium chlorate is one of our best and cheapest chemical weed killers. Its use however, cannot be recommended unreservedly because of the danger of fire in handling it.

EXTEND FREIGHT REDUCTIONS ON EXPORT BEEF SHIPMENTS

Arrangements have been completed by the Hon. Robert Weir, federal Minister of Agriculture, by which the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways have extended a further concession in respect to the 50 per cent reduction in freight rate on western cattle shipped for export from Ontario and Quebec feeding points through the Port of Montreal. By an arrangement made last autumn the 50 per cent freight rate applied to western cattle brought to eastern feeds lots for finishing. The same privilege now applies to the movement of these western cattle finished on eastern feed lots moving for export through Montreal. All shipments of such cattle go forward to Montreal for export at the regular export rate and a 50 per cent reduction is obtained by way of rebate on application to the proper officer of the railway concerned at its Montreal headquarters.

SPRAY BULLETIN

Sweet Cherries.

When most of the shucks are off spray with any one of the following sprays:

1. Lime sulphur, 1-40, and 1 1-2 pounds arsenate of lead to 40 gallons.
2. Lime sulphur, 1-40, and 1 pound arsenate of lead to 40 gallons.
3. Or Bordeaux mixture, 3-6-40, instead of lime sulphur, using arsenate of lead or arsenate of lead in the above mentioned proportions.

Grapes

The removal of suckers from the base of the vine should be done before the suckers are six inches in length. It is more easily done at this time than later.

Vines ten years of age or older may be renewed by allowing a sucker to grow from the base of the vine. A sucker is allowed to make two years' growth before the old vine is cut off, during which time the sucker is shaped to form a new vine. This practice of renewal will materially aid in the control of dead arm, probably the most serious disease of the grape.

Apples

Some of the early varieties will shortly be ready for the application of the calyx spray. Apply as soon as the blossoms have nearly all fallen, using lime sulphur, 1-40, and 1 1-2 pounds arsenate of lead to each 40 gallons. The addition of 3 pounds of hydrated lime for each 40 gallons of spray is optional.

Currants and Gooseberries

Spray just after the fruit is set, with Bordeaux mixture, 3-6-40, adding either 1 1-2 pounds arsenate of lead or 1 pound arsenate of lead to each 40 gallons. Poison may be omitted when spraying black currants. If red spider is present, use lime sulphur, 1-40, instead of Bordeaux mixture.

SELL SEED ON CERTIFICATE

A statement just issued by Geo. H. Clark, Dominion Seed Commissioner, is of special interest because it shows that Canadian seed growers disposed of nearly 3,000,000 pounds of Red Clover and a similar amount of Alsike seed from the 1931 crop in the British market. He points out particularly that seed trade contracts in Canada are generally based on official grades while seed trade contracts with other countries are based mainly on actual samples. The advantage to the Canadian exporter is substantial when he can quote prices and receive offers by cablegram on the basis of seed certificate.

WHAT AGRICULTURE IS WORTH

Ottawa: A statement just issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimates the gross agricultural wealth of Canada as follows:

Lands	$3,316,031,000
Buildings	1,382,684,000
Implements and machinery	665,172,000
Live stock	468,300,000
Poultry	43,138,000
Animals on fur farms	13,000,000
Agricultural production	880,240,000

Total $6,768,595,000

By deducting agricultural production from total wealth and dividing this figure by agricultural production it will be seen that the ratio of capital investment is $6.67 for each $1 of revenue produced. This is certainly an interesting and favourable comparison on an industrial basis.

FROZEN WILD FLOWERS

An interesting example of the application of refrigeration to industry is afforded in the following item which appears in the current issue of the Cold Storage News Letter, issued by the Dominion Dairy and Cold Storage Branch:

"A bunch of waratahs, flannel flowers, and native roses arrived in England from Australia recently. They were shipped by Mr. John Shorter, Australian agent for Messrs. John Doulton, of Lambert, to show the English pottery painters the true form and colour of some of Australia's most popular native flowers. Typical blooms were selected for the purposes, and were placed in a can of water which was frozen by the Fresh Food and Ice Co. Ltd. Afterward, the ice block containing the flowers was placed in a wooden box and sent to the liner to be placed in the freezing chamber."

BUCKWHEAT DESTROYS WEEDS

Among the many uses of buckwheat as a field crop perhaps none is more important than its value as a weed destroyer, states crop specialists of the Dominion Experimental Farm. Its value in this connection arises from its quick germination and rapid growth. The fact that two crops of buckwheat can be raised during one year usually makes it particularly effective in the eradication of even such difficult weed problems as those presented by the Sow Thistle and Quack Grass.

MIXTURE FOOLS THE FLIES

This is the time of the year when a great majority of us seek pleasures of forest, field and stream and it is a time when it is useful to know an effective protection from the attacks of flies, mosquitoes and forest insects. The Entomological Branch of the federal Department of Agriculture has tried and recommends the following oil preparation:

	Ounces
Oil of Citronella	3
Spirits of Camphor	1
Oil of Tar	1
Oil of Pennyroyal	1/4
Castor Oil	4 to 6

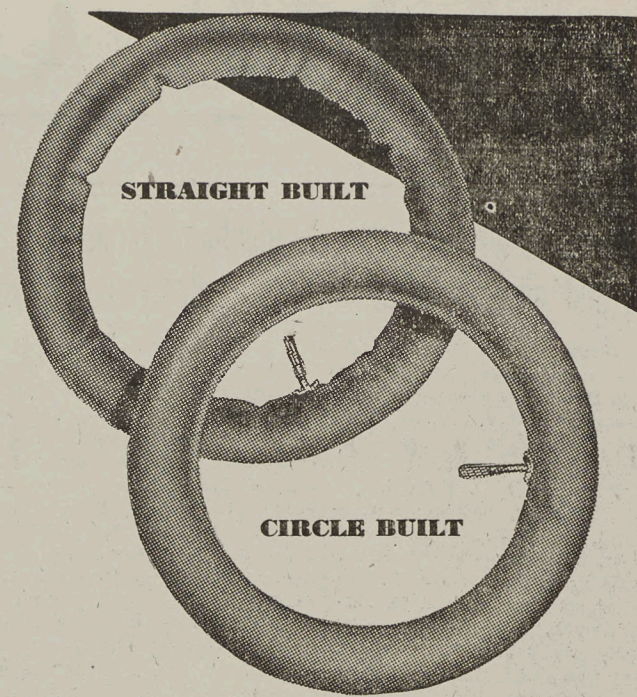

(Depending on sensitiveness of the skin)
If a salve or grease is preferred instead of an oil, tallow may be used in place of the castor oil.

WHERE MERIT SYSTEM WORKS

Discussing the development of hay and pasture crops L. E. Kirk, Dominion Agrostologist, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, points out that this is a case in which the merit system always works perfectly. "Before a hay or pasture crop can ever become widely used," he states. "It must be able to produce a satisfactory yield of hay or pasture and plenty of good seed; it must have good feeding quality and be able to resist disease and compete with weeds. It must also be winter-hardy, drought resistant in some areas, and able to mature seed in our comparatively short growing season. Not only do crops differ in these respects but some varieties of the same crop are much more satisfactory than others."

POLICY IS EXTENDED

Continuation of the Cockerel Distribution Policy is announced by the Hon. Robert Weir, Federal Minister of Agriculture. The Department will pay transportation charges and $1.25 each toward the cost of R.O.P. or Registered male birds sold and shipped under the policy in lots of ten or more. All purchases or sales are negotiated directly between the breeder and the purchaser. To obtain the benefits of the policy forms prescribed by the Department are made out at the time of the sale, shipment and delivery of the birds. No limit is set as to price but the cockerels can be obtained only from breeders entered in either in of the federal policies of record of Performance or Registration.

WASHING WOOLEN SWEATERS

Woolen sweaters and knit suits may be laundered without loss of size and shape if one uses the right methods, according to Miss Loretta McMurry, extension clothing specialist, Kansas State College. She says:

"If you would succeed in washing woolen sweaters, warm a sufficient quantity of water to provide at least four changes of water and keep it at the same temperature. Shave mild soap and dissolve it in a small amount of warm water. Add this soap jelly to the wash water instead of rubbing it on the garment.

"Work the garment under the water, using a kneading motion. Do not lift it out of the water as the great weight of the water in the yarns stretches them. When one water becomes soiled, press the garment against the side of the tub, drain off the soiled water, and add clean. Then knead again. Repeat the process until the rinse water is clear. Remove all the water possible by pressing the garment against the side of the tub, then roll the sweater or dress onto a heavy Turkish towel, fold it in the towel, and press out as much of the remaining water as possible. White woollens will not yellow so readily if peroxide of hydrogen is used in the rinse water. A few drops of glycerin in the last water gives small, white woolen garments the glisten of new woolen.

"Sweaters and knit dresses should be spread out on flat surfaces to dry, and should be spread to dry in their original shape and size. If one has taken the exact measurements of the garment before washing it, she can dry it exactly as it was when new. Drying may be quickened by laying the garment on a curtain stretched on curtain frames. An electric fan, operated under the curtain, also speeds the drying."

WHAT TO SERVE

Onion sauce is served with roast shoulder of mutton.

Red currant, cranberry, or black currant jelly with saddle, leg, loin, or neck.

With breast of mutton or lamb serve cucumber sauce.

With leg of mutton, haricot beans and gravy flavored with tomato.

With lamb, serve mint sauce or mint jelly.

With roast beef, serve grated horse-radish or horseradish sauce.

With veal, grilled ham or bacon, slices of lemon, and a well-flavored thickened brown gravy.

With roast pork, sage and onion stuffing, bread sauce, apple sauce, and thickened gravy.

All the above roasts may be accompanied by old potatoes when in season, peeled, cut in halves lengthwise, and baked and browned under the meat. If the roast is very small, half boil and dry the potatoes before putting them in the meat tin.

Suitable vegetables are: green peas, cabbage, spinach, cauliflower, vegetable marrow. In fact, almost any vegetable in season may be eaten with hot roast meat. Asparagus should, however, be served as a separate dish. Cauliflower, vegetable marrow and leeks require a good white sauce.

USES FOR TABLE SAUCES

Many excellent prepared sauces are a decided boon to the cook. As a means toward variety, these sauces are almost indispensable, for they are an important ingredient in the preparation of many types of dishes.

Some of the prepared sauces are used by the cupful in the combining of casserole and scalloped dishes and in the clever manipulation of left-overs. Others of more concentrated piquancy are used as seasoning and are needed in small quantities.

If you are looking for short cuts in cooking, you will find one in the bottled tomato sauce, available in several good brands. All the substance of fresh, ripe tomatoes is combined in such a sauce which is really a concentrated puree. Spices are not added to the sauce so the pure tomato flavor is not altered in any way. Instead of blending a sauce from strained, canned or fresh tomatoes at the cost of both time and labor, use a commercial sauce for the sake of its convenience and impeccable flavor. Seasonings may of course be added as wanted and a thinner sauce can be made by diluting the canned sauce with stock or water.

FROM SOUP TO SAUCE

Another product that can be used for mixtures that are liked highly seasoned is commercially canned tomato soup. It is ready to reheat just as it comes from the can and really makes a superior sauce. Other concentrated soups, too, such as chicken, vegetable and meat and vegetable combinations, can be used with equal satisfaction.

Many of the table sauces are excellent for cooking, too. A few drops only are necessary to give a subtle flavor to gravies and sauces, steaks and roasts, salad dressings, aspics, croquette mixtures, made dishes of all kinds as well as vegetables.

There is another preparation that, while it is quite mild in flavor and of comparatively little value as a seasoning, is ever-present help to busy cooks. This sauce is made of a dark caramel foundation with a delicate seasoning of sweet herbs, but pale gravies and weak looking second-stock soups gain richness of color and are made to look more appetizing by the addition of a teaspoonful—more or less as needed—of the sauce.

The secret of the richness of flavor which distinguishes dishes made by the professional cook often lies in the use of stock rather than milk or water. Canned consommé or bouillon are excellent in place of homemade stock and are always on hand when wanted. Bouillon cubes and meat extracts dissolved in boiling water also produce a delicious well flavored stock in a minute.

Catsups such as tomato, mushroom and walnut are invaluable canned products that give zest to many combinations.

It costs so little to keep these condiments on hand and they mean so much to the art of seasoning that it will pay every home-maker to experiment in the realm of bottled sauces and make full use of them.—Montreal Star.

ODDS AND ENDS OF FASHION

Smart odds and ends among Paris fashions are Schiaparelli's interchangeable twin pinafores and dotted foulard handkerchiefs, navy on white and vice versa worn with a plain navy dress; Mainbocher's little summer evening shawls covered with fringes, his sleeved lingerie guimpes with dark evening gowns and bright colored button trimmings on black day-frocks; Augustabernard's artificial flower-ruffled evening capes and dresses; Lelong's large bunches of artificial flowers used for afternoon and evening corsages, his bright three-colored striped crocheted sports boleros; Maggy Rouff's new birds' head pins in strasse with colored jewel eyes that faithfully reproduce all French birds.

Smart cotton evening gowns are Mainbocher's figured cambries worn with t guimpe, and Lelong's white organdie with raised red wool spots and a crocheted red wool bodice.

It is forecast that black will outmode colors. Browns will come next in volume, cinnamon is a favorite. Dark yellowish greens are prominent in Lelong's and Paray's establishments. Bright reds are liked for evening, especially in wraps.

Linen and canvas-weave woollens are outstanding. Shantung is popular for summer. Textile novelties are peau d'ange tulle, peau d'ange crepe. Jersey lace and Schiaparelli's special crepe jersey for evening gowns.

CANNING PINEAPPLE

Wash and peel pineapple. Remove eyes. Remove pineapple from the core and pack into jars. Fill to within one inch from the top with syrup made with equal parts sugar and water, boil for three minutes. Adjust rubber and top. Seal jars. Place on a rack in a boiler of water, having the water come well over the top of the jars. Bring to the boil and boil for 20 minutes. Remove from water. Cool before storing.

CARING FOR SOME OF THE EARLY PRODUCTS

When vegetables and fruits are in season and plentiful, it seems natural for the thrifty housewife to lay by some of the surplus in suitable form for use during the months when the fresh are not available.

Their use in various forms adds much to the variety and healthfulness of family menus. Their acids, mineral matter and bulk balance a tendency towards an excess of fats and starch in the diet and do much to keep the body in good condition. This means greater efficiency and greater ability to resist disease. Edible wild greens such as lamb's quarters, and the young shoots of milkweed can be used before the garden things are ready, or as a supplement to them.

The following information may be suggestive for using some of the earlier products. Later in the season a copy of the revised bulletin "The Preservation of Food", Bulletin No. 252, will be sent to each Institute.

Why Foods Spoil

It is a help in canning to know that the agents that cause foods to spoil are minute, living organisms belonging to the lowest order of plant life, moulds, yeasts and bacteria, and living upon food cause fermentation and putrefaction. They do not thrive so readily where acid is present, so fruits, which contain organic acids are easier to can than the non-acid vegetables and meats. A large amount of sugar assists in preventing bacterial growth but makes the product less wholesome.

Use Fresh Fruits and Vegetables

To ensure a good quality of product, can fresh fruits and vegetables. Choose each product when at the height of the season or when each crop is at its best. Always test the jars before using and use new rubbers each time. To test jars, partially fill with water, adjust rubber and top, seal tightly and invert to test for leakage. Before using, put the jars on a rack in a container of cold water, surround with cold water and boil for fifteen minutes. Leave in the water until they are ready to be used and do not touch the inside of jar or glass top with any unsterile object. When preparing food and filling jars, work quickly.

The Pack

Corn, beans and spinach should be packed rather loosely. This allows the heat to penetrate the centre of the jar more quickly and ensure more even sterilization. After food is put into jar, fill up with boiling water, or liquid in which the vegetable has been pre-cooked and use a knife dipped in boiling water to remove any air bubbles. Adjust rubbers which have been dipped in boiling water, and top. Seal and then loosen a quarter of a turn and cook.

There are four methods of canning in general use, the hot water bath, steamer, steam pressure cooker and oven. Hot water baths are manufactured commercially, but a new wash boiler, a deep pail, a kettle, or any other container which has a close fitting cover makes an excellent home canner when equipped with some means of preventing the jars from resting on the bottom.

Any steamer which maintains a temperature equal to that of boiling water may be used successfully as a canner.

Steam Pressure Cookers are built solidly and permit the use of steam under pressure which means the temperature is raised above the ordinary boiling point of water and, consequently, the cooking period is shortened.

Oven—an automatic heat control or a thermometer is necessary when canning in glass jars in an oven. Too much heat would result in breakage. Put jars on the rack of the oven. Oven canning is simple and easy; there is no steam and no hot water to handle.

Adobe Now Turned Out by Modern Machinery

The lowly adobe has gone modern. No longer is use of this cheap and once proletarian building material restricted to the Mexican pen and to the lonely homesteader. The sun-dried mud block of the West, says the Los Angeles Times, has been adopted by the people of means and by the Twentieth century builder accustomed to working in stone, and concrete, and brick, and lumber.

Modern machinery is now employed in the manufacture of the adobes. Once the mud and the straw which helps to hold it together were mixed by bare feet treading industriously in a big box, a trough or a mere puddle in the ground. Now this is accomplished by a concrete mixer.

The tradition that only a Mexican can make good adobes has been exploded in Arizona and the veil of semi-mystery thrown about the art has been rent. Formerly it was thought that the "paisano" possessed some mysterious sixth sense, some faculty inherited from remote Indian ancestors which no mere white man could hope to acquire. Now it is known that any competent workman can turn out adobes as durable as any molded by the Aztecs before the days of Cortez, and a really bright one is likely to figure out improvements in the process.

Great Moghul Emperor Also Inventive Genius

India never had a greater king than Akbar, the Moghul, who at thirteen years of age found himself shouldered with the cares of an empire which showed unmistakable signs of collapsing into ruins. During the 40 years of this remarkable man's power he turned back the tides of dissolution, rebuilt his kingdom, enlarged and extended it throughout India, brought it under unity of organization. He died in 1605.

Akbar was a great lover of sports and hunting. He rode with all the address of his Moghul ancestors. His courage was reckless and astounding—once inducing him to attack with but 40 followers a whole hostile army, which was promptly routed. He disliked luxury and was a modest eater. His spare time, during the earlier years of his rule, was given over to inventions. One of these was a machine for cleaning 16 guns simultaneously, and another a device for firing off 17 cannon at the same time. Both aided him greatly in his campaigns.—Boston Globe.

"House in the Wood"

Situated in The Hague wood in Holland is the famous "House in the Woods"—a royal villa erected about 1645 for the widow of Frederic Henry of Orange. Here Mary Stuart, wife of William II, passed the happiest years of her life. At The Hague in 1890 was held the international peace conference. The Hague is rapidly extending to the popular seaside resort of Scheveningen. Close to this popular resort is the Peace palace, erected at a cost of $1,500,000, donated by Andrew Carnegie. The foundation stone was laid July 30, 1907, and bears the inscription: "Paxi justia firmantur hanc aedem Andreae Cornegii munificencia dedicavit." The building was founded after the first peace conference and was intended to be the meeting place of the permanent court of arbitration.

Unwelcome Reform

Queen Victoria's bonnets belong to history. Mrs. A. M. W. Stirling, sister-in-law of William de Morgan, the novelist, has told in her reminiscences, "Life's Little Day," how her mother who patronized the same milliner as did the queen, once begged the honnet maker to become a "national benefactor and persuade the queen to wear less hideous bonnets."

"Oh, madam, I did try," cried the milliner in despair. "I ventured to modify the shape ever so little and put a pretty bow at the side, and they were sent back to me with a crushing message: 'What her majesty requires is a bonnet—not a cap.'—Kansas City Star.

Ancient Slave Ship

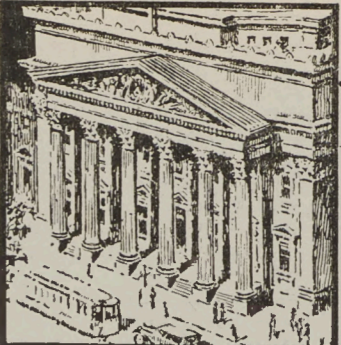

Comparatively sound, despite its great age, the hull of the only remaining slave ship known to have brought "black ivory" to the coast of North America lies drawn up on the beach at St. Croix, Virgin Islands. The vessel, the property of Cornelius Penthony, bears the name of the Vigilant. She was operated under the Danish flag until slavery was abolished in the Virgin Islands in 1848. Both before and after that time she was engaged in the slave trade, landing slaves illegally in United States territory, Cuba, Porto Rico and Brazil.

Lawmakers Rowed to Work

Washington's first legislature, says an article in the Seattle Times, with two exceptions, was composed of west side men, the two from the east side of the Cascades being representatives of Clark county, which at that time spread all over eastern Washington. Nearly the entire membership journeyed to and from the capital in boats, and it required two good days at the oars to reach Olympia from Seattle a journey more or less hazardous.

Durable Food

We once put a mark on the edge of a railroad lunch-counter sandwich and found it there two years later. It had been newly half-soled, but it was the same sandwich.—Woman's Home Companion.

DUNVEGAN

MRS. JOHN A. CAMPBELL

"Asleep in Jesus". At the rising of the sun on the morning of June 17th, there passed to her eternal reward in Heaven, Sarah Ann, dearly beloved wife of Mr. John A. Campbell and their infant daughter, at the Cornwall General Hospital.

Her sudden death cast a gloom over her many friends she being ill for only a few hours. All that medical skill and loving care could do was done but God in His infinite love had chosen otherwise.

Deceased, who was thirty-five years of age, was a woman whose worth was heightened by acquaintance with her. By her sweet, happy disposition and winning personality she made many friends. Her hand was always ready to greet old and young alike. Her calm faith and resignation at all times added proof of her sincere Christian character. The late Mrs. Campbell was a member of the Kenyon Presbyterian Church.

The funeral on Sunday afternoon, June 19th, at three o'clock, was very largely attended. In the absence of her pastor, the service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Kirkland of Kirk Hill, who took as his text, "In mourning there is joy," the choir singing "It may not be on the mountain heights."

A very impressive service was conducted at the grave by the officers and members of Glengarry Star Lodge, L. O. B. A. No. 353, of which she was a worthy member.

Among the friends from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Bert Wade, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Millar, Mr. and Mrs. Peter

Her Headache Relieved In a Very Short Time

SAYS ONTARIO LADY AFTER USING DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS
Mrs. W. Hineman Strongly Recommends Them. To All Kidney Sufferers

Pictou, Ont., June 23rd—(Special). "Dodd's Kidney Pills regulated my Kidneys and relieved my backache in a short time," writes Mrs. W. Hineman, R.R. No. 9, this place. "They made me feel more like myself. I recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to anyone that wishes to get relief from backache."

Do you realize what an important part your Kidneys play in your bodily health and length of life? To be well the Kidneys must thoroughly cleanse the blood of all poisonous waste. Sluggish Kidneys permit waste impurities to remain in the blood, causing a slowing up the system. One is apt to feel tired and drowsy—to have dull, aching back and annoying headaches and dizzy spells.

Assist the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills. They stimulate the Kidneys and assist in removing the poisons of bodily waste. Dodd's Kidney Pills are endorsed from coast to coast.

Cameron and Maggie Cameron of Montreal; Messrs. Angus Campbell and Duncan Campbell of Swanton, Vermont; Mr. Neil M. MacCuaig of Plenty, Sask., Mrs. Duncan Cameron, of Vancouver, B. C. Messrs. Malcolm and Loch. MacRae, Sandy MacDonald and M. W. Stewart of Vankleek Hill.

The following floral tributes were received, pillow from her husband, spray from Allister, wreaths, MacDonald and Campbell families, Glengarry Star L.O.B.A. No. 353, Charlie Anderson and Mrs. P. E. Starer, New York and spray Dunvegan Football Club.

The pallbearers were her cousins, Messrs. Loch, Stewart, Alex. M. Stewart, Alex. Campbell, Murdie Campbell, Alex. R. Stewart and J. R. MacPhee. Mrs. Campbell leaves to mourn her loss, her sorrowing husband and little son Allister, also her aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. Rory MacDonald, three sisters and two brothers, Cassie and Bella of New York, Mary, John and Willie, at home.

Our lips cannot speak how we miss her, Our hearts cannot tell what to say, God only knows how we miss her In our home that is lonesome to-day.

IN MEMORIAM

In memory of little Florence Isabel McEwen, of Maxville, who was accidentally and fatally injured on June 13th, 1932.

It is not only the aged and the sick who are called away, but the summons comes for children in the midst of their merry play.

She had been with us only six summers but it hardly seemed a day when at eve, God sent His angel and bore our darling away.

No time for a thought or a whisper, No time for a last good-bye Just a soft, sweet call in the twilight, To her home beyond the sky.

And we who are left to miss her Must forever be content With the joy of her living memory Nor question the reason meant.

For there twixt us and the portal That stands for the saints ajar She shines in her heavenly glory Bearing no mark nor scar.

But the same sweet smile now eternal That she wore on her few short days, To remind us that Angels watch o'er us And will keep us in all our ways.

A Trip Abroad in 1909

For the first few hours' ride the country is comparatively level or slightly undulating, but as the train nears Belgium, the country is quite hilly but not rocky, and after having left France we reach the height of land and into the mining and manufacturing country. This is a great industrial district, the Sheffield of Belgium, where there are extensive coal mines, and numerous blast furnaces where great quantities of iron and steel are manufactured. Of late years Belgium has become quite noted for her large export trade in iron and steel rails. We passed a number of these industrial centres on our way.

Brussels is scarcely an hour's ride from the boundary but we pass through some interesting country. This is part of the district that has long been known as the cockpit of Europe because it has been for several centuries the ground upon which the powers of Europe have decided their quarrels and the Netherlands have, at different times, been held by Spain, Austria and France, according to the fortunes of war.

A short distance to the east of our route are the well known names of Fleuris and Ligny, while to the west is Quatre Bras and farther on, eight miles from Brussels, is the best known of all, Waterloo. While Brussels is interesting in some respects, it is at the same time disappointing. It is supposed to be a second Paris, on a small scale, but the imitation is rather poor. Coming directly from Paris, one may expect too much. There are a number of fine public buildings and the streets and boulevards are also fine, but the most of the buildings in the city are smaller than usually seen in a large city, not being more than three or four storeys high. There are several fine parks accessible from all parts of the city by electric car, the finest is the Forest of Soignes, immediately south of the city and covers over 30,000 acres of ground. The Boulevard de Waterloo is a wide well paved street, extending through this Forest in a southerly direction for six miles to Waterloo village and two miles farther south is the village of Mont St. Jean, slightly back from the brow of the ridge occupied by the British troops the day of the battle. The wide valley running east and west, between two sloping hills, occupied by both armies then, is today covered with fields of grain, and except for the several monuments to be seen, there is nothing to suggest that this quiet peaceful plain was on the 18th June, 1816, the scene of one of the most desperate conflicts and bloody battles in the world's history. The northern range of hills which is considerably more elevated was occupied by the British and the allied troops, while the French army occupied the southern range.

The road by which we came from Brussels crosses this valley, continuing in a southerly direction to Charleroi, and on the brow of the opposite hill, about a mile distant, is LaBelle Alliance, the centre of the position occupied by Napoleon and his troops. Half way down from the position occupied by the British troops is the farm house of La Haie Sainte and about 300 yards to the south west, and almost in the hollow, is the Chateau of Hougomont both of which figured conspicuously in the engagement, but particularly the latter.

Hougomont, is today in an excellent state of preservation. The walls enclose a piece of ground, probably two and one-half or three acres in extent, and visitors are charged a fee of one franc admission. The building on the site, is still occupied as a dwelling and the gateway is the one where the famous struggle took place. At one time the enemy succeeded in forcing the gates open. Col. Maedonell, afterwards, Sir James, and Sergt. Graham, both powerful men, with the assistance of others, by sheer strength, succeeded in closing the gates in the face of the enemy. All who entered perished. The troops who were entrusted with the defence of Hougomont were regiments of the Coldstream Guards and a company of the 3rd or Scots Guards under the command of Sir James Maedonell with a company of Brunswick troops and the importance of the position may be understood when Wellington in his despatch to the Home Government mentioned that the successful defence of Hougomont had an important bearing in the success of the battle. It may be interesting to many of those who read this article to know that the medal won by Sir James at Waterloo, as well as a number of others, won during the Peninsular war in Spain, under Wellington, are in the possession of one of his relatives, J. A. Maedonell, K.C., of this town. There are small buildings as well as a chapel inside the enclosure. The thatched covering which was set on fire during the battle is now replaced by metal roofing, otherwise the buildings in the enclosure are practically the same as at that time. A well which was between the chapel and outbuildings was after the battle, used as a burying place for the brave fellows who fell defending the place and a stone tablet marks the spot.

As already stated, the road from Brussels cuts the centre of the position occupied by both armies and on the brow of the hill are two monuments, one in memory of the Prussian dead, and the other to Lieut. Col. Gordon, Wellington's A.D.C. who fell, there, a few hundred yards to the west is the immense mound with the lion on top. To the left of where the monument stands occurred one of the most dramatic incidents of that terrible afternoon. Sir Edward Cressy in his description of the battle tells the following and it may not be out of place to give it here:

"About two in the afternoon when Hougomont was being desparately assaulted Marshall Ney, at the head of 12,000 troops, attempted to force the left centre of the position occupied by the allies bringing seventy-four guns and placing them on an immense midway between both armies. Directly in front of the point of attack opposed to him was Bylant's brigade, a force of 4,000 Dutch Belgian troops, while back of the brow of the hill was part of Picton's brigade, the 42nd and 92nd Highland regiment.

"As Ney's troops ascended the slope of the hill cheering wildly, Bylant's entire brigade turned and fled in disgraceful and disorderly panic but there were men more worthy of the name behind. Picton was there, that stern and fiery spirit and not even Ney himself could surpass him in stern and resolute bravery. He brought his two regiments together side by side in a thin two deep line to meet the victorious enemy four times their strength. Onward they come, confidently, over the ridge of the hill until within thirty yards. He shouted, "A volley and then charge." The volley was poured in and with a fierce hurrah they rushed in with the cold steel. Picton was shot dead as he rushed on with his men. The enemy reeled back in confusion before that terrible charge and just at the critical moment the Scots Greys and the Irish Inniskilleners came down like a whirlwind on the whole mass sending them staggering from the crest of the hill and cutting them down in whole battalions.

"On went the horsemen amid the wreck of the columns, capturing two Eagles, two thousand prisoners and seventy-four guns, disabling them and rendering them useless during the remainder of the day."

This, however, is only the first act in that terrible drama that ended only with the setting of the sun and which left over 40,000 of the brave actors lying on the field, never more to march to the beat of the drum.

LETTER 14

February 25th, 1910.

We left Brussels by morning train for Cologne, Germany, going by way of Aix-la-Chapelle. The going occupied most of the day, and as the weather was fine, we had a most pleasant journey. In Belgium we met fewer people who could speak the English language than in any of the other countries on the Continent visited.

We were fortunate in having for a fellow passenger a young German officer who was able to converse fluently in English and as he was well acquainted with the country along the route, proved a most agreeable companion. The country here was quite rough as we were still in the mining districts, but like all European countries, every available foot of land is under cultivation. Here and there scattered over the land may be seen the lazily flapping wings of the old Dutch windmills which give a certain unique picturesqueness to the country.

We passed the boundary line into Germany into Aix-la-Chapelle and before reaching Cologne, a short distance to the left of the line of travel is Essen, where the great Krupp iron works are situated. Cologne is a beautiful and one of the oldest cities on the Rhine and has a population of about 500,000. It has a splendid electric car system, magnificent buildings, boulevards, parks and beer gardens. During the day the people are as busy as bees, but the evenings are given up to enjoyment, drinking their light beer and wine and listening to the music for which Germany is famous, but everything is as orderly as a machine.

While there is enough in Cologne to interest one for a number of days, the Cathedral is undoubtedly the centre of attraction. It is considered the finest piece of Gothic architecture in Germany. The building was first commenced about 1240. The vault is 161 feet high and supported by a hundred columns. The windows are most beautiful and the steeple is 512 feet high.

Cologne was the birthplace of Agrippina, consort of the Emperor Claudius and mother of Nero. We went by steamer up the Rhine as far as Mayence, it taking some fourteen hours. Leaving Cologne at 8 in the morning the boat arrives at its destination at 10 p.m., returning the following day. Mayence is as far up the Rhine as the river is navigable for large steamers. This magnificent river is the commercial outlet, by water, for Germany and a large number of boats ply up and down continually. From Cologne and for hours sailing up river the country is quite level spreading out in full view, the banks here being quite low. Farther on the hills appear in view and soon we find we are sailing up between banks which are constantly varying in height some of which are over 10,000 feet high.

Here and there, as the boat turns a bend in the river, one of the numerous old castles appears in sight or a little village or small town nestling in the valley between the hills.

There are a great many of these old ruined castles to be seen on both banks of the Rhine situated on the edges of high precipices and almost inaccessible. Several of these are still occupied, the ancient castle of Vogelsburg being owned and kept up by Prince Henry of Prussia. Several of these have a history which dates back to the time of the early Romans figuring quite prominently in the early history of the country.

The grape vineyards that line the steep banks of the river are one of the novel sights. Not far from Bingen we counted thirty-seven terraced walls which were built so as to support the soil on the hill sides and on each narrow level surface ascending the hills are to be seen the vines growing.

While there are very many small towns and villages passed the larger are Bonn, Coblenz and "Bingen on the Rhine." Mayence is then reached and is a military city of 100,000 population and having a garrison of 10,000 in time of peace. Everywhere are to be seen the German officers in their gay uniforms and at almost any time of the day are to be heard the military bands.

Leaving Mayence we go direct to Switzerland by rail following the west banks of the Rhine but remaining over for the day at Strasburgh. Here our route runs for miles through farms devoted to grape culture. Strasburgh is another of Germany's military towns. It is at the present time one of the strongest cities in the German Empire, surrounded by a girdle of fourteen forts placed several miles out from the city. This is the capital of Alsace-Lorraine which formerly belonged to France but became annexed to Germany after the war of 1870, it being besieged by the Germans at that time and bombarded for fourteen days before it surrendered. Traces of the bombardment can still be seen in the city. While the city is not a large one, having a population of less than 200,000, still it is a great commercial centre and the lively traffic on the streets would suggest an extensive trade for the place. With the exception of the Cathedral, the other large public buildings are comparatively modern, the post office, the Imperial University, the Emperor's Palace and the University Library. The German Emperor occasionally makes his residence here.

This Cathedral, like the one at Cologne, is noted all over the world as one of the finest pieces of architecture in Europe. Built of red sandstone and standing for over five centuries these massive walls appear as if they should last for ages yet. The exterior as well as interior is a magnificent piece of workmanship. The altar with its beautiful tracery and carving is particularly unique and in one end of the building is the wonderful astronomical clock, the only one of its kind ever made, it taking 20 years to plan it and four years to build it. Shortly after leaving Strasburgh, the train which follows the valley of the Rhine, soon commences to climb the steep ascent, the altitude of which is more and more perceptible as we near the border.

In the distance running parallel, most of our route, is the range of hills known as the Black Forest and directly in front as we near the city of Basel are to be seen the towering peaks of the Swiss Alps.

Basel, the gate to Switzerland, is one of the largest and finest cities of that country and except for the language one could easily believe himself to be in one of the most modern American cities. Nowhere can one see better paved, and cleaner streets than here. The electric power used in all the Swiss cities for their street car systems as well as other purposes is generated by water flowing from the many streams down from the mountains and in electric development no nation excels the Swiss. Consequently those mountain streams are looked upon as one of the country's most valuable assets, and has in most cases been reserved for the state.

Manufacturing is carried on here to a large extent of which silks in various forms are perhaps the most important. The river divides the city in two and is spanned by four splendid bridges. There are several large parks inside the city limits also Botanical gardens easily reached by electric car where one can spend their time, during a hot summer's day sheltered from the sun under the many shade trees.

Programme Sketched For Farm Research

Ottawa, June 9.—"If we cannot carry things beyond the range of other people, there is no justification for existence," Dr. Robert Newton, Acting Director of the Division of Biology and Agriculture, National Research Laboratories, declared in outlining the projected program of his division before the National Research Council's National Advisory Agricultural Committee, Ottawa, on Friday. Studies in agriculture to be undertaken in the new laboratories are to be fundamental in character and of such a nature that, with present facilities and personnel, cannot be undertaken elsewhere in Canada.

The agricultural program, it was indicated, is related to or has grown out of the numerous projects already being attacked by the Council's officers or by organizations associated with the Council through the twelve associate committees now engaged on agricultural work.

Referring to Canada's most important agricultural product, wheat, and in particular to the suggestion that carotin (one of its constituents, which gives a yellow color to flour if not bleached out), may be associated with the vitamin value of the flour, Dr. Newton said: "If there is anything to be found out, either for or against our grain, Canada should find out about it first."

Spite is a little word; but it represents as strange a jumble of feelings and compound of discords as any polysyllable in the language.

NEURITIS HAS GONE!

Banished by Kruschen

"I had acute neuritis in the shoulder and left arm, due to exposure in bad weather," writes the Rev. H. E. T. "It was impossible to lift the arm to dress or to use it in any way, and, of course, the pain was dreadful. All external applications were useless. I got it completely normal again by keeping the parts affected warm and taking daily, early in the morning, Kruschen Salts in a tumbler of hot water. It took nearly a month, but every vestige of neuritis has gone."

Neuritis is typical of a dozen other complaints—some minor, some very serious—which all result from impurities in the blood. And it is impure blood, circulating all over the system and setting up inflammation in the tissues, that causes those excruciating pains.

Kruschen Salts can be safely trusted to set the matter right. Because Kruschen contains just what Nature needs to persuade your internal organs back into a healthy, normal condition.

A survey of the Wolf Week programme reveals a combination of sentiment and excitement. Governor Roosevelt of New York State has presented the citizens with a British flag taken by the U. S. troops when they burned the Sault in 1814. The flag will be hoisted with appropriate ceremonies. The excitement comes in when the visitors will be invited to amuse themselves running the Sault Rapids in canoes; attending Algoma Wolf Club dinners, and sympathizing with the unlucky winner of a bear, which animal, Jim Curran proposes to raffle in lieu of one of his beloved wolves. The Algoma Self-Denial Club has added three pleasant features to the programme. The members of this club never deny themselves anything, and they advise that there are no peevish cops in the Sault; that their city is only an overnight ride from Toronto on the Canadian Pacific's homiest train, and that they still serve cheese with the apple pie in the Sault, which Jim Curran says is built beside Lake Superior in the great Algoma forest, near the timber wolves.

Jim Curran, Editor of the Sault Daily Star, believes with Old Sam Martin that "a man who says he has been et by a wolf is a liar". Jim Curran, as all the world knows, is an expert on wolves, so much so, indeed, that he has persuaded Sault Ste. Marie to hold a Wolf Week, July 25-30. That is the kind of a week it's going to be. Jim Curran, the wolf expert, it will be worth attending; the Sault is the friendliest town in Canada, and that respectable strangers will be welcome. Plug hats will not be practical headgear during Wolf Week at the Sault. This is a warning, and is understandable at a show where the background is totally composed of timber wolves, Hudson Bay Barbecues, Indians and whiskers. Jim Curran and his fellow-citizens of the friendliest town have cornered the world's best professional long distance swimmers for some real racing, and have per-

A False Conclusion

(By Winifred Graham)

"I envy you, Camilla, more than any woman in the world."

"Yet I have had my troubles, Polly," Camilla replied.

Mrs. Bellairs shook her head. "Nothing to speak of, surely."

"Well, you know, marrying poor, dear Philip when I was not the least in love with him. Mother insisted, and, after all, it turned out for the best. He formed—in fact, he cultivated me, turned me from a raw school-girl into a femme de monde, and left me a free woman before my hair was grey. It keeps its colour well, don't you think?"

"Your hair is still yellow naturally. Though four years a widow, you are only five-and-twenty."

"Oh, don't say 'yellow'—such a detestable colour, like a canary—suggests of a beaky nose and sallow cheeks," protested Camilla.

"But you were speaking of your husband—"

"Yes—poor Philip. He always told me he was consumptive in earlier days, as an inducement to marry him."

Camilla hated herself as she spoke—it was a way she had drifted into under Mrs. Bellairs' influence. Her friend seemed to expect frivolity from her, and smiled appreciatively.

"Ah, Camilla, you have everything—youth, health, independence. You are not even burdened with a family, and certainly make the most of life. But sometimes, dear, I think, you know, you are just a little—too—well, too unconventional."

"Indeed. Do tell me of my indiscretions; it would be so very interesting."

Camilla clasped her hands, and tried not to smile.

"They are hardly worth mentioning. I was only thinking of Mr. Wilson."

Mr. Wilson not worth mentioning? Polly, I cannot let you insult my friends."

"You know what I mean," murmured Mrs. Bellairs, lowering her voice confidentially; "six waltzes running, and then a cosy corner for the rest of the evening."

"But I went in to supper with Mr. Norris."

"And ate half a sandwich before running away. Yes, he told me about it afterwards. Of course, it is quite excusable that you should like Mr. Wilson, a most attractive man; but his reputation—"

"What about his reputation?"

"I never care to repeat scandal, but—"

"Oh, stop! I know you are going to tell me something horrid, and I would rather not hear. I wish so many nice people had not had reputations. I am expecting him to tea this afternoon; perhaps you will not care to meet him?"

"Thanks, dear"—kissing Camilla affectionately—"I always take a hint; it is one of my talents."

"No, Polly, no; I really did not mean—"

But Mrs. Bellairs was already half way down the stairs, confronting Mr. Wilson.

"I am almost tempted to stay," she said, shaking hands; "but an appointment with my dentist—"

The hall-door closed, and Camilla found herself alone in the drawing-room with Mr. Wilson.

"I am glad you have come," she said.

"Are you?" he answered. "I almost wish that you were sorry."

"Why?"

"Because I am going away, and I do not want you to miss me. Camilla, you have made my life happier—better; forgive me if I shock you, but you are the only woman I have ever respected. Nothing evil could touch you. I wish I were more worthy of your friendship."

A strange thrill of wonder and joy passed through Camilla. She felt instinctively, but over this man at least she had an influence for good, that with him she escaped from the frivolous side of her nature to her real—her better self.

"No," she said, "I am not good; but sometimes I feel that it is in me to be good if I would only try myself—give myself the chance. I am so fond of the world, and the world's amusements, all my time is taken up with pleasure; and I am not tired yet—not hazy. But lately I have been thinking—"

She leant forward and clasped her hands.

"What have you thought? Won't you tell me?"

"Yes, but only you. I have no very high ideal—it is not that I am living beneath my own standard, for I want to enjoy life to its full, and I cannot do things by halves. I am not the sort of woman to take fits and starts—working for the poor one day and amusing myself the next. But it has come across me lately what a worthless record I must show at the end of it all; so I have thought of a compromise. Can I trust you—this is quite in confidence?"

"If you have a doubt, don't."

"Are you not curious?"

"Yes, but to be curious is to be in sympathy; mine is sympathetic curiosity."

"Then listen. My idea may startle you, and you will call it far-fetched, and you will say I am not in earnest."

"You look sincere," he answered.

"I think I shall believe you."

"I want to enjoy my life in my own set among my own people, and I find I cannot do this with a clear conscience; so I have made a resolve, and a very difficult one. I am going to give one year out of my life to God."

"How shall you do that—what plan have you formed?"

"A simple and at the same time a hard plan. None of my friends are to know where I am, or where I go. I just intend to vanish off the face of the earth for twelve months' hard labour. All my little vanities, my extravagances, must be given up, buried, forgotten. One half of London does not care to learn or know how the other half lives. I am going to find out for myself, to settle in the very heart of the East End, dressed as a Sister of Charity, to live and work as such."

"You would sacrifice yourself to this extent, and yet have no one know?"

"Yes; that is the chief point, for, if I told my friends, they would tempt me back directly; they would give me no peace, or else they would think that I wanted credit for what I did. They would call it an affectation."

The man got up and paced the room.

"I don't like the experiment," he said. "Think of the risks you run, the horrible diseases bred by dirt and squalor; consider your health."

"Ah, now you are beginning! Everyone would say the same. I should meet with resistance, arguments, persuasions on all sides; and as to my health, I am absurdly strong."

"But what put this craze into your head? You could never endure such a life for a month."

"You made me think of it," she said.

"I? Impossible!"

"Yes, by saying I had influenced you for good. I know—I feel that I can influence people, and I have always used this power for purely selfish motives. Now, I am going to try and exert it over poor, tempted, wretched creatures, to give myself a wider field. You half think that I am joking, but you dare not say so."

"No, I am not so ungrateful for your confidence. I am sure you mean every word—I wish you did not. Self-sacrifice is splendid in theory, but torture in practice."

"You are going to South Africa?"

said Camilla, breaking away from the subject.

"Yes—this month."

"Let me see—it is July. I shall miss Goodwood and Cowes, my winter trip to the Riviera—nearly the whole of next Season; and you will be back in a year. We shall meet again at dances, and I shall forget the dreary labour, the hardships, the pain; or, if I do not forget, at least I shall know how to appreciate luxury and ease. I don't think I have ever really had 'a due sense of all my blessings.'

"You will make no excuse to your friends?" he asked incredulously.

"None. They will think I have gone to some quiet place for my health, or that I am travelling for pleasure, but no one will suspect me of working among the poor. I like doing odd things, surprising myself."

"And me?"

"Yes, and you," extending her hands as he rose to go. "Perhaps when you return I shall deserve the 'respect' you feel for me, I shall look on it as my due. Now, I confess it is flattering—and, alas! undeserved."

He pressed her hands to his lips; he was pale. Then she drew her hands away, and let him go.

"I may live sixty or seventy years," she said thoughtfully. "I can spare one, I can give up one, out of the many."

So she thought of her mission, and not of the man.

A bed sitting-room in a cheap lodging, the July sun creeping through a small window, and the figure of Camilla writing by a deal table.

"So it's over," she said, with a sigh of relief, "the long, hard year."

She folded her letter, and added it to a pile at her side.

"How strange to be picking up the threads just where I dropped them a year ago. I wonder if I have really been missed—I wonder if my disappearance made any difference to anybody?"

She thought over the past twelve months, contrasting them with the rest of her life, and, as she meditated, saw again incident upon incident pass, picture-like, before her eyes.

The first difficult struggle, when the absence of little comforts seemed almost like the rending of body and soul, and then the rush of active work among a class of busy workers—morning, noon, night, every hour needed, every minute of importance. The delight, too, of finding herself a power by means of the money she had hitherto spent in the world of fashion, to go about doing good. She remembered the fatigue and horror she experienced when first visiting the squalid scenes where the field of her labors lay. Then the thrill of pleasure when faces lit up and smiled, when lives brightened, and men and women seemed happier for her presence; and, last of all, the forgetfulness of self which moulded her character and turned her from a butterfly into a woman.

But now, stifled by the heat in the slums, and yet with the keen appreciation for enjoyment still flowing through her veins, she was to return to the old life and the pleasurable ways. The pretty house in Wimpole Street was to be opened out again for two or three weeks of the fleeting Season, and Camilla would return to be bosom of her friends, to bloom again in the flower-garden of her own world.

She got up, and moved about the narrow room with light tread and dancing eyes; she laughed aloud at her thoughts; she clasped her hands over her heart, marvelling at its rapid beating.

"I shall go as I came," she said, "without a word of good-bye to anyone. To-morrow I shall drive away—vanish! I should hate to be thanked, to listen to gratitude or blessings—it would make me feel a brute for going I stepped out of my own groove, and I must step back again. The children here call me 'the good fairy'—I will keep up the mystery to the end."

Camilla was resting on the sofa, trying to read a novel, when Mrs. Bellairs was announced.

She sprang up with a little cry of pleasure, and flung her arms round the visitor's neck.

"Oh, Polly dear, this is nice seeing you again!"

Mrs. Bellairs disentangled herself from the embraces, greeting Camilla less cordially.

"You were lying down, were you not?" she said. "I am afraid that I disturbed you."

"I had a headache, but you will take it away. I have so much to talk about, I do not know where to begin."

Camilla drew a chair forward as she spoke.

"What gave you a headache—heat?"

"No, worry! Tell me, Polly, what does it all mean? I've been away only a year, and yet I seem to have lost touch with everybody. Why do people look at me coldly? Ah! I have noticed it, you need not shake your head. Why do they avoid me, as if I were a criminal? Our lives are our own, to do as we please with. One would almost imagine, because I have chosen to absent myself, to go into retirement for a year, that people thought—"

But Camilla broke off, as if her sentence was not worth finishing.

"Well, dear, people will think, and people will talk—there is no stopping them. Your conduct was certainly strange, and, if innocent, misleading."

Camilla sprang to her feet, the colour mantling in her cheeks, lips quivering, eyes flashing.

"What are you daring to insinuate?" she asked.

"I insinuate nothing. What have you to say for yourself?"

The retort staggered Camilla. "To say for myself?" she asked.

"Yes, to repudiate the scandal."

"I—I don't understand." Her face turned pale.

"It is very simple. Last summer your name, unfortunately, was coupled with a certain Mr. Wilson's said Mrs. Bellairs, eyeing Camilla sternly; "he went away, you went away—no one knew you were going; he has just returned, you have just returned—in the meanwhile your hiding-place has been kept secret. We may open our eyes, we may look at you askance, but we do not condemn you, Camilla, because—"

"Enough! I have been insulted sufficiently. Listen," and a hard laugh broke from her; "I will satisfy your curiosity. While Society has been spreading its vile slanders, I have been working, slaving, month after month, in the poorest parish in the East End of London. I need not trouble you with details, why I did it, my motives, or what I gained. I think it has taught me to despise you all. I hope it has." Her voice broke. She turned away.

Cornwall, Mr. and Mrs. T. Beyor, Apple Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Beyor, and Mr. Richie, Lancaster. MISS MARY ANN McDONALD On Tuesday morning, June 14th, 1932 in the Hotel Dieu Hospital, Cornwall, death claimed very suddenly a former highly respected resident of Glen Roy, in the person of Miss Mary A. McDonald. The deceased, who was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Roderick McDonald, had not enjoyed good health for several years, but never had a word of complaint been uttered from those lips now so closely sealed in death. On the above date the late Miss McDonald was called to her eternal reward well prepared with the comforting rites of the Church. She leaves to mourn four brothers and two sisters, namely, Dan of Standwood, Wash.; Alex. of Portland, Ore., James of Pouce Coupee, B.C., John A. of Vancouver, B.C., Mary R. of Montreal, and Nellie, of Alexandria, to whom we extend sincere sympathy. The funeral took place on Friday morning, 17th inst., from 15-8th Char., where she was born 53 years ago to St. Raphaels Church and cemetery. Requiem Mass was chanted by Rev. D. A. McDonald and family, Cornwall. MR. KENNETH MACDOUGALL After a lingering illness, the call came to Mr. Kenneth John MacDougall on June 7, 1932 at the Sanatorium, Hamilton, Ontario. The deceased, almost 23 years of age, was the eldest son of Major Hugh Allan MacDougall and his wife, Jean Smith, of South Porcupine, Ont., and was well liked by all who knew him, and his passing has caused much sadness among his many friends. Besides a large number of relatives and friends, the loss is mourned by his father and mother, one brother, Walter, and three sisters, Madge (Mrs. B. D. Kelly, Timmins), Mildred (Mrs. Bruce Relyea, Cleveland, Ohio) and Stella. The remains, arriving at Alexandria, on June 10, were removed by D. A. McRae and Son, undertakers, Vankleek Hill, to the cemetery at Kirk Hill United Church where an impressive sermon was preached to the assembled friends by Rev. R. J. Kirkland, pastor of St. Columba Presbyterian Church. The text from Job 14. 14, "If a man die, shall he live again?" was taken as the basis of a discourse setting forth the proof that there is a future state of existence in which man's soul lives on through eternity. Psalm 23, Rock of Ages and Forever with the Lord were sung by the congregation and choir. Four cousins, Messrs. John D. McLeod, Thomas J., and Douglas MacDougall, and William Smith, acted as pallbearers.
