New Flax Syndicate In Dalhousie Station Area

PROCESSING PLANT NOW UNDER CONSTRUCTION TO HANDLE
3,000-ACRE YIELD

Construction got underway, Monday, on Glengarry's third flax processing plant as the newly formed Dalhousie Station Flax Syndicate began erection of a $9,000 mill on the property of D. J. Bathurst, Dalhousie Mills. This latest addition to Glengarry's rapidly expanding flax industry will process the yield from 3,000 acres of fibre flax grown by independent farmers of that district.

The North Lancaster Flax Co-Operative pioneered the growing of flax in this county two years ago and since that time Glengarry farmers have become steadily more flax conscious. This spring the Chisholm Flax Group was organized by farmers of the Alexandria area and the Dalhousie Station Syndicate also came into being. More than 6,000 acres of flax are being grown this year throughout Glengarry as a result.

D. J. Bathurst, prominent resident of Dalhousie Mills is President of the new Syndicate which has 15 members. Adelard Chatelos of St. Polycarpe, an experienced flax man, is General Manager and other officers are to be appointed at a meeting to be held this week.

A two-storey cement block building which will measure 110 by 44 feet, the new plant is being constructed on a three acre plot which Mr. Bathurst donated to the Syndicate. Ovidia Currier of St. Telephore has the contract and work should be completed within a month.

A tow scutcher and other machinery have been ordered and are expected to arrive on schedule.

The Ottawa Spotlight

BY M. McDOUGALL

OTTAWA, July 22.—The spirit of economy is in the air of the Capital these days. This is naturally not an economy implying any slackening of the war effort, quite the reverse. War orders have now reached or just about reached the two billion dollar mark. But to wage war there is more to be done than the training of men and the production of equipment. The whole population has to make sacrifices and mould their method of life into harmony with the war machine. And this does not mean the war machine of this country alone but that of other countries as well, particularly Britain. The British need oil and gasoline; they need all the ocean tankers they can get to carry the oil from foreign wells in various parts of the world to their ports. This is a primary reason for the new gasoline regulations in Canada which close filling stations in this country for twelve hours at night and all day Sundays. Besides this, there is the steadily increasing demand of Canada's war industries. The non-essential use of oil and gas has to be drastically reduced. Otherwise a rationing system will be introduced. At present Canada's annual consumption of oil is about 65 million barrels. About 9,500,000 barrels are produced domestically, mainly in the Turner Valley; about 11 million barrels flow through the pipe line to Sarnia, and when completed the new line from Portland, Maine to Montreal will carry about 15 million. It will still be necessary to cut down the 65 million consumption to about 50 million and to do this, non-essential use, in private cars, etc., will have to be reduced by one-half.

Gasoline is just one item. The hand of the nation at war will be stretched out to other materials and services. There is certain to be increasing diversion of goods and services to war needs, entailing increasing voluntary sacrifices from the people. As evidenced in the support given the new regulations on oil, there is quite clearly a growing appreciation in the general community of the urgent need of turning the faucets of production from civilian to war channels.

The success of the appeal to the youth of the country to join the army, bringing about 35,000 new recruits to the army, 12,000 to the Air Force and 3,500 to the navy, has gratified defence authorities, and the general public. A considerable number who tried to enlist, but were found medically unfit will have priority rights with veterans of receiving training in vocational schools to enable them to take up work in war industry. The work of enlistment goes on, and will go on steadily, for the limit of Canada's war effort is set by the great danger which threatens, and by nothing else. About 7,000 additional men will be needed monthly by the army. That is the present quota asked from Canadian youth.

In a short time now the call will go out for 1,500 women to join the Women's Auxiliary Corps. This is not the full number required. Other calls will follow. The first women called by the department of National War services will be engaged in administrative and maintenance work. They will drive ambulances and cars, will be stenographers, dental assistants and will assist with X-ray machines. Women's ability to help in the heavy tasks of war has been well demonstrated in Britain where they are on the front line, and taking their part in a way that has gained the approval and admiration of the world. War is no longer a man's affair. All have their part to play, and even if we are for the present at least outside the bombing zone, Canada will be looking to her women to play an increasingly important part in the work of carrying on the war effort. The R.C.A.F. is also forming a women's auxiliary service. The navy has not as yet announced its plans.

Concern is still felt over the curtailment of coal production in some mines in Nova Scotia. The trouble is based on differences between the coal miners and executives of the union, but the result is a slackening of effort in the production of a vital commodity. The government has thus far taken no drastic action.

A good deal of talk is heard just now about the possibility of a new cabinet post being created to look after the economic side of the war effort. This is still a matter of speculation. The control of commodities and prices, the supply of basic materials in which there is a shortage looming and the curtailment of domestic use of vital commodities and service would come under his direction. There is no doubt that with our own production expansion, the demands of the British for basic materials and growth of the industrial effort in the United States, there are acute difficulties. The appointment of the new Dept. would lighten the burden of some ministers, but the question is whether an increase in the duties and responsibilities of the economic boards and the heads of departments looking after specific commodities, with increasingly close cooperation among them might not serve the same purpose.

RESCUED SPITFIRES

Back in Canada after more than two years in the R.A.F., Flying Officer R. F. (Bob) Leavitt, D.F.C., of Regina, is in Montreal visiting relatives before going home. One of his experiences during the days following the fall of France was returning to that country with other squadron members in Tiger Moths, which they destroyed, and flew back to their base in Spitfires and Fairey Battles. "We got quite a few good planes back this way," he said.

REUNITED

A charming English girl who has seen more than her share of tragedy during the past months in Britain stepped from a plane into the arms of her mother at Malton airport recently. War-torn Europe was only 30 hours behind 20-year-old Marian Davies of London, England, when she left the New York plane. Her arrival reunited the widow and three children of a Royal Air Force officer, Captain Frances Davies, who was killed in a block-out accident three months ago.

Discovery of 'Kaolin'

Made Through White Clay

The discovery of kaolin which has helped so materially in porcelain making, is one of the romantic stories connected with the industry. Hair powder at that time was in general use. This story is told that a rich ironmaster while riding noticed that his horse's feet were covered with a white clay. This clay was found to be a good substitute for the flour used on wigs. Bottger, finding it much heavier than the flour, was curious to know the ingredients. On analysis of it, much to his surprise, he found it contained the properties necessary to complete his discovery of porcelain the white clay known as kaolin. Whether or not the manner of its discovery is according to fact, the credit must be given to Johann Frederick Bottger for producing hard paste porcelain at the Meissen works, which became one of the most celebrated factories in Europe.

Porcelain manufacture was begun in Meissen in 1710. The factory continued under Bottger's guidance until his death in 1719. However, the real development of the factory came under the direction of J. G. Herold from 1720-40, when he introduced painting in the decoration. In 1731, he obtained the help of an excellent sculptor, J. J. Kandler, who made a marked improvement in form. The factory continued under various directors and patrons until 1813, the date that marks the end of the collectors interest in the factory. Many changes have been made since then and some of the old designs have been reproduced but they do not compare with the old.

Shoes Are Approach to

Education in Colombia

Strawberries purchased by the yard; business transactions done mostly in coffee shops; teaching people to wear shoes—these are a few of the oddities in Bogota, Colombia.

In Medellin, Colombia, strawberries are grown on small farms in the valley which pockets the city. The berries are pierced individually with needle and thread and brought to the market in strings. The price you pay depends on the length of the string.

Cafe society in Bogota is a bit different than in America. It is for men only—a business institution where most of Bogota's business affairs are transacted.

And through the fertile and agile mind of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan, national education minister, people are being taught to wear shoes as a brand new approach to public education. Here shoes represent a higher standard of living to thousands. As part of the educational system children of families too poor to buy through the regular channels make the shoe purchases at special stores where the shoes are sold at cost.

The shoes guard the children from tropical diseases, encourage them to improve personal appearance, teach them a sense of responsibility and the value of money, since each child must keep notes in a little receipt book of his tiny payments for his boots.

Taste Like Dog Food

"Iron rations"—streamlined and brought strictly up to date—but still iron rations that taste like "dog food" is the complaint of a majority of 40,000 men who recently went through war maneuvers in southwestern Washington. The new field rations—officially designated as Type C—come in four cans. One contains 15 ounces of meat and vegetable hash, one 15 ounces of meat and beans, one 15 ounces of meat and vegetable stew and the fourth 4½ ounces of hard biscuit, half an ounce of sugar and three-tenths of an ounce of soluble coffee. As one disillusioned National Guardsman summed it up, "If it's hot, it tastes like hot dog food and if it is cold, it tastes like cold dog food. That's the only difference."

Scene of Villa Raid

History was made at Columbus, N. M., March 9, 1916, when Francisco (Pancho) Villa, called by an American author "The Enchanted Captain," invaded the United States at the head of his revolutionary band of Mexicans, killing 16 Americans, soldiers and civilians, and setting fire to the town. Driven off by U. S. cavalry, the raiders left 200 of their number dead on the battlefield. The motive for Villa's attack has never been definitely ascertained. The incident caused President Woodrow Wilson to order the Punitive Expedition into Mexico under command of Gen. John J. Pershing, who later became the commander of the American Expeditionary Force in Europe during the World War.

Rocking Children to Sleep

A few years ago amateur experts claimed that the child's emotional development would be injured by such a motherly act as rocking a child to sleep. We now know from thousands of clinical cases, however, that this cuddling is good for both child and parent. Lack of cuddling causes the emotional trouble. The practical difficulty for some parents is time and for many others, a rocking chair. This seems to have gone out of style. A theoretical difficulty is that the child may want to be rocked every night.

Where Statistics Fail

That breakdown of enlistments by military districts under the recent recruiting campaign is by no means completely revealing.

Take, for example, the military district of Victoria—which fell short of its quota. It would be foolish to criticize Victoria without knowing how many men had volunteered from that district before this campaign, or how many had volunteered from the same district for the Air Force and Navy during the campaign. A recruit for the Air Force of the Navy is as useful as a recruit for the Army.

A fairer breakdown, we think, would be one showing enlistments from the various military districts—for all war services—since the beginning of the war. Even that, without explanations of the concentration of vital war industries in certain districts, wouldn't tell everything.

Mere figures can be very misleading things. The Ottawa Journal.

A Commn Effort

(Simcoe Reformer)

Into our office come weekly newspapers from all over Canada—from the towns of British Columbia and from the towns of the Maritime Provinces. The reading of these gives a wonderful review of the activities of our great country. At the present time they are all ringing with news of great endeavours and great events in connection with the War—the Victory Loan, Recruiting, the Queen's Canadian Fund, Red Cross activities, War Funds, Salvage and many other activities. The same activities are taking place in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and the Crown Colonies. How vast is the effort that is being made. Sometimes it is slow but how mighty is the preparation that is under way! Hitler may have had his victories in Europe, but can he crush all this? Some day—and perhaps soon—he will feel the impact of a mighty united empire that will crush HIM.

Democracy Can Work Fast, Too

Eleven months ago a contractor's truck plowed through sand to the middle of an out-of-the-way blueberry patch in Quebec and began to unload tools. Today one of the world's largest aerial bomb factories stands in the middle of that patch, its normal output to be more than 100,000 bombs a year. This is a completed 500-pounder, with one of the girls who make such bombs beside it.

Canadian Tank Unit Reaches Britain

Marching into camp in England are troops of the First Army Tank Brigade, who left Camp Borden in June in the biggest, most secret and most speedily organized movement from the camp since the war began. There were an Ontario battalion, a Quebec battalion and a battalion from Alberta. With them were medical, signal, army service and ordnance corps detachments. For the black-capped tankers the move meant farewell to the veteran U.S. machines they have used in training here.

The 19-year-old husband, Lynn V. Bowman, must answer to a charge of car theft filed on complaint of his wealthy father-in-law, Walter J. Bales. Still to be set for hearing is an annulment suit filed two days after the couple eloped July 1. Police gave this account of the girl's story: She accompanied Bowman from her home because "he was red-headed, hot-headed and mean to me."

Army To Issue Early Call For 1500 Women

Miss Elizabeth Smellie, C.B.E., R. R.C., matron-in-chief of the nursing staff, Canadian Army Medical Corps, has been asked to undertake the organization of the women's Canadian Army Auxiliary Corps, Defence Minister Ralston announced Wednesday 16th. inst. Col. Ralston added that a commandant for the corps would be appointed at an early date.

Replace Men Needed

Col. Ralston stated that the army expected to call on the Department of War Services very soon for 1,500 women to replace men needed for active service. The members of the auxiliary corps would be asked to drive ambulances, light trucks, cook and act as stenographers, dental chair assistants, radiographers, etc.

A neat, custom-made khaki uniform for members of the auxiliary corps has been designed, said Col. Ralston.

Living-out Allowance.

Until military accommodation is provided, members of the auxiliary corps will be given a living-out allowance.

Only the Beginning.

This call for 1,500 women will only be a beginning, Col. Ralston said. In a statement last month he estimated between 2,000 and 3,000 women would be called to the Canadian Women's Army Corps in six months.

The 1,500 women first called to the service in the Auxiliary Army Corps will be engaged in administrative and maintenance tasks, as will their sisters in the auxiliary service of the Royal Canadian Air Force now being organized. The Royal Canadian Navy has not announced plans to form an auxiliary service of women similar to that assisting the Royal Navy.

The women recruits will be paid "something less" than men in the army, Col. Ralston said.

Under the organization now established, a pool of women who have passed requirements of the service will be maintained by the National War Services Department and will be drawn on as required by the army.

Col. Ralston said many applications to join the auxiliary corps have been received by the Defence Department but the requirements would be met through the War Services office.

Farewell To

Miss Violet Kelly

On Thursday evening July 10, ratepayers friends and pupils of S.S. No. 12 Kenyon met in the school to bid farewell to their teacher, Miss Violet Kelly.

The school was tastefully decorated for the occasion with summer flowers and coloured streamers. The early part of the evening was spent in dancing. Immediately after the serving of dainty refreshments Miss Rita O'Connor presented Miss Kelly with a set of tweed travelling cases and Miss Theresa O'Connor read an address.

In reply Miss Kelly thanked the members of the school board and section not only for their kind generosity on this occasion but also for their whole-hearted co-operation in all school activities in the past and assured them of a continued interest in their enterprises and progress.

After short speeches by members of the board and others dancing was resumed until the early hours of the morning.

THE ADDRESS

Dear Miss Kelly,

It is with mingled feelings of happiness and regret that we are assembled here to-night to do honour to you, our esteemed teacher for the past two years—happens to have you among us once more if only for this evening and sorrow occasioned by the fact that you see fit to carry on your valuable work elsewhere.

Though our time in the section has been brief yet in that short time you have achieved admirable results not only academically but your influence in social activities has earned the gratitude of pupils and parents alike.

It is only fitting that we should invite you here to-night to acknowledge your sincere and successful efforts to promote the welfare of the school and the community. Furthermore please be assured that whenever you care to visit the people of the section a hearty welcome awaits you.

As a small token of the appreciation of the pupils and ratepayers of S.S. No. 12 Kenyon we ask you to accept this gift, which conveys with it the good wishes of the donors for your future happiness and success in all your endeavours.

Signed on behalf of the pupils and ratepayers of S.S. No. 12 Kenyon.

John R. McDonald, Chairman.

Delicious Hot

Weather Desserts

The Danish dish called Rodgrod turns up every year at this time. Served very cold with thick cream. It's a wonderful hot weather dessert.

RODGROD

One quart fresh currants. 1 pint fresh red raspberries, 1½ cups sugar, 1-4 teaspoon salt, 1-3 cup cornstarch. Wash currants and raspberries. Add 1-4 cup water and simmer gently until all juice is extracted from fruit. About 10 minutes. Strain through fine cloth. Mix sugar, salt and cornstarch. Add to juice. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. When thickened, clear and bubbly, remove and chill. Serve very cold with chilled cream.

FRUIT MELANGE

One cup sugar, 1 cup water, strips of lemon or orange rind, fresh fruit. Cook sugar, water and lemon or orange rind together about 5 minutes. Add a few raspberries, blackberries and slices of peaches and pears and continue to simmer until fruit is slightly tender. Chill before serving. Serve in tall sherbert glasses. A refreshing dessert.

A Llewellyn Setter Is

Traced to Recent Origin

A Llewellyn setter is not a distinct breed but merely a strain of the English setter. In England Llewellyn setters are termed "English" setters. All Llewellyn setters are English setters but not all English setters are Llewellyn setters.

The existence of the English setter can be traced for hundreds of years, whereas the Llewellyn strain of English setter is of comparatively recent origin, it having resulted from breeding experiments by various Englishmen in the 1860s. R. Purcell-Llewellyn, whose name was conferred upon this strain, was not its originator, but, after its worth as a hunting dog had been demonstrated by other Englishmen, Llewellyn, recognizing its superiority as a bird dog, engaged in extensive breeding operations which assisted in the development of the strain, and he was the first to export dogs of this strain to Canada and the United States, beginning in the 1870s. The strain originated by breeding the offspring of two dogs, Duke and Rhoebe, with bitches of the purebred strain that had been developed by Edward Laverak.

A setter, the pedigree of which traces back on both sides without an outcross to these foundational dogs, is called a "100 per cent Llewellyn" or "straight-bred." When there exists the slightest outcross, even to the extent of 1 per cent, the dog in the strict sense is no longer considered a Llewellyn setter, but is what is termed a "grade" setter. The fact that a dog is a "grade," rather than a "100 per cent Llewellyn," or a "straight-bred," does not militate against its ability as a bird dog.

The Llewellyn setter is characterized by its small size, averaging about 40 to 45 pounds; its great speed, intensive nervous energy and beautiful style.

Ancient Pewterers Had

Guild to Protect Trade

Pewter is composed largely of tin, lead, copper and antimony. By custom the kind of object governed the amount of lead used; but it was found that all pewterers did not abide by this rule. Lead was used in quantities larger than was practical and the articles soon became misshapen. The Worshipful Company of Pewterers was formed in England for the same purpose as the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths—to act as guardian of the quality of the metals used in the composition of the products turned out. We find mention of the guild as early as 1348. Definite standards were established and were expected to be rigidly upheld. The guild mark was required on each piece and often individual marks were added. Thus we have the crowned rose, the thistle, the fleur-de-lis, various forms of angels, St. Michael and the dragon, an arm and hand and many others. Old English pewter is always marked with the maker's mark or "touch," registered officially with the Pewterers' Guild.

There are no compulsory standards in America but that of high tradition and honor for the work turned out. However, they followed the English custom of impressing a trade-mark on their pewter, that of the eagle with the maker's name or initials being much used.

Ultra-Violet Aids Potato

Invisible ultra-violet light, already used by G-men in running down foreign espionage agents and public enemies, acts as a detective in finding potatoes guilty of spreading one of the worst diseases of the important crop.

Prof. R. B. Harvey of the University of Minnesota told the American Association for the Advancement of Science of his experiences with a method for using this radiation in finding and eliminating carriers of bacterial ring rot.

Appearing only a few years ago, ring rot has already struck in 37 states, in some regions destroying half or more of the crop. Plant pathologists, co-operating in many states, discovered that the germ does not live in the soil, but comes in with the seed.

Bankers Go to School

Bankers in Bucyrus, Ohio, are going to school again—not exactly to learn anything, but to teach the youngsters a few things about money matters—that is, if when the youngsters become adults they will have enough money at one time to interest a banker. The officers of the banking institutions in the Ohio town invite the school children to come in and inspect the bank, in addition to conducting school classes through the bank. Frequently the bankers go to the schools and give talks in simple terms concerning banking, believing, as one officer says, that these talks, coming from bankers themselves, would create a favorable impression for the banking profession.

Cats Easily Poisoned

A few points to remember about your cat. Don't fail to keep fresh water for your cat at all times; milk is not a substitute for water. Don't forget that cats are very easily poisoned by antiseptics, soaps or medicines that are harmless to human beings or dogs. Tar, soaps containing carbolic acid, gasoline, turpentine or any powders containing these things may be fatal to a cat.

British Tanks Tested on Blitzed Houses

It's just a pushover now, but it was once a home. Monster British tanks like this one, which will help end the Nazi threat to the world, are tested on blitzed English houses, finishing the work that bombs began. Other homes must be found for the civilian population, who have put up such terrific resistance to the Nazi air attack.

Residents of Glen Robertson and vicinity very much regretted the departure of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Seale on Monday to Mattawa, where Mr. Seale was transferred to act as Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia for an indefinite time. Residents of the Glen for the past 15 years this estimable couple will be missed in this district and their many friends wish them all kinds of luck which we all say is coming to them.

To Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Seale on their Departure from Glen Robertson

It was in the summer time, Some fifteen years ago, When a stranger came to town This man we did not know.

But scarcely had a few days passed When the Glen folks knew twas real He was to be the manager of the Bank

And whose name was John A. Seale.

The Banking work he knew so well And experience did not lack He quickly made up friends with all And soon we called him Jack.

Ere long his thoughts turned to the East, His vows there to abide And to you Gladys Seale we say You came here as a bride.

You've played your part since coming here As hostess, Church, and Red Cross work,

You were ever ready to lend a hand Yet, we never saw you shift.

We realize with deep regret That with us you can't remain But we hope the time will come anon When you both will return again.

Your leaving will be keenly felt, A fact we can't deny So we simply say au revoir, We will not say goodbye.

Now we know where you are going 'Tho it doesn't differ where you stay, You will still think of Glen Robertson Tho you're many miles away.

Please accept these candid lines, As a little send-off to eulogize our past, That linked the friendship we have enjoyed

Which we hope will always last. There are things we scarcely think off, While other things we take to heart Prove to remember the old saying, That best of friends must part.

Glen Robertson, July 21, 1941.

Replanting The Rhubarb Plot

Rhubarb thrives best on a comparatively rich, deep, well drained soil. The soil selected should be preferably prepared the Autumn previous to planting by spading in deeply and thoroughly a good application of stable manure; where space will permit it may be plowed under. Early the following Spring the soil should be well worked up and a commercial fertilizer, preferably 5-10-5 applied at the rate of five pounds per square rod and well mixed with the soil prior to planting.

When resetting crowns taken from old dug-up clumps, single crowns should be selected, removing all old roots. These are set three feet apart in rows five feet apart. Plant the crown so that its growing tip is just below the surface of the soil and tramp the soil firmly. Hoe, dig or cultivate at intervals to loosen the soil and control weeds. After the Autumn frosts kill the leaves, mulch with straw or strawy manure for the Winter. Remove this in Spring and continue to dig and cultivate. Strong rapid growth of the leaves is the objective. The leaves manufacture the nutrients that develop the roots, in which are stored the reserves of food that make for the rapid growth of the stalks that we use as food, in the early Spring. Remove no stalks the first year, but few the second, and after that never more than half the stalks that develop. The result will then be large, long, tender stalks for the table. It takes three or four years to develop a really productive crown.

done in the way of treatment, hence the emphasis on prevention. Drugs or vaccines may sometimes cause a temporary improvement, but usually the germs remain in the udder after treatment. Treatment is applicable particularly to attacks of acute mastitis and to injuries to the point of the teat, which latter almost invariably result in chronic mastitis infection. To be effective, any treatment must be applied at the first sign of trouble.

There is no "cut-and-dried" method of treatment which is uniformly effective in all cases of acute mastitis. Various factors have to be considered which can only be determined by a veterinarian. If a veterinarian is not immediately available, the farmer must do what he can along the following lines: Bathe the affected quarter gently with hot water for half an hour three or four times daily; after drying thoroughly, apply hot antiphlogistine and a suspensory bandage to relieve the weight of the udder; keep the cow blanketed and as quiet as possible; remove the germ-laden milk from the quarter frequently, taking care that the udder tissue is disturbed as little as possible; never massage the udder during an acute attack; reduce the amount of concentrates and feed lightly twice daily with bran mash containing one-half ounce of saltpetre, but avoid the use of drastic cathartics such as Epsom salts.

How To Save On Gasoline And Oil

Here are, the 17 ways by which gasoline and oil can be saved, as offered by advisers of the Oil Controller G. R. Cottrelle:

2. Avoid "jackrabbit" starts.
3. Avoid useless or non-essential

It's Britain's Innings as R.A.F. Hits Stride

As the R.A.F. gets into its stride, "meting out to the Germans," as Prime Minister Churchill said, "the measure and more than the measure that they have been meting out to us." Canadian troops in England are being welded into a stronger and stronger force, reducing to the vanishing point the prospect of a successful Nazi invasion. The King here arrives at a southern England depot with Lieutenant-General A. G. L. McNaughton, commander-in-chief of Canadian forces in England, to present colors to two Canadian regiments, one from New Brunswick, and the other from western Canada.

Not Mississippi Floodlands, But a Toronto Street

Toronto's downpour on July 16 were common. In the Howland and soaked more than one motorist as Ave. subway a motorist tried to flooded areas stalled cars, and scenes drive through what he thought was reminiscent of Mississippi floods shallow water. His engine stalled, and he had practically to swim for it as the water mounted higher and higher. Here an effort is made to attach a tow rope to the car.

4. Turn off the motor of your car when not in use; do not leave it idling.
5. Don't race your engine, let it warm up slowly.
6. Don't strain your engine, change gears.
7. Keep carburetor cleaned and properly adjusted.
8. Tune up motor, timing, etc.
9. Keep spark plugs and valves clean.
10. Check cooling system—overheating wastes gasoline.
11. Maintain tires at right pressure.
12. Lubricate efficiently, worn engines waste gasoline.
13. Drive in groups to and from work using cars on alternate days.
14. For golf, picnics and other outings, use in one car instead of several.

Canada's Premier Tests One of Nation's Weapons

Prime Minister King's grip on the controls of Canada's war effort, and his insight into the problems connected therewith, have been increased by his tour of western Canada. The "climax of the whole tour," Premier King said, was the big military show at Shilo camp, Man., where his inspection of units comprising more than 3,500 men wound up with a realistic military demonstration. Shown how a two-pounder anti-tank gun worked, he took his place on the seat of the gun and operated it for a minute or two.

"CALLING ALL CARS"

Save Gasoline

A NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Canada is right up against an acute shortage of gasoline and fuel oil. Tankers that normally supply our country have been commandeered for vitally important overseas service.

The Commonwealth Air Training Plan, the rapid development of Canada's mechanized army units and the great work carried on by our corvettes make the demand for fuel urgent.

Our crude oil intake is limited. There is just one thing to do if our fighting forces are to carry on with a "full tank". Every Canadian motorist is asked to cut his daily gas consumption in half!

There are many ways by which this 50% saving can be made... ways and means to give you more mileage per gallon. You can drive slower so that you will use less gasoline. You can go fifty-fifty with your neighbours, inviting each other to share cars... for business, and for pleasure. People can readily go to and from work together, using one car instead of four... using one gallon of gasoline instead of several. Women as well as men can make these savings.

The amount of gasoline used in Canada for business, social and non-essential activities is amazingly high in proportion to that used by our fighting forces. One look at the figures would convince you that this situation must be reversed.

Canada does not ask or request you to put your car up. She merely asks for your help... asks that you walk sometimes when the distance isn't too great...

that you take a shorter drive on Sunday afternoon... that you look after your car and keep it in good condition... that you say to your neighbour: "Let's use my car today, Jim; we'll use yours tomorrow."

Every day, in greater and greater quantity, we must release gasoline and oil by the thousands of gallons to our throbbing munitions plants... to our tanks and armoured cars... to our fighting planes and bombers... to our corvettes and merchant ships that ply the vital sea-lanes... so that the day of victory may sooner be at hand.

Will YOU help?

It is also vitally important that you reduce the use of domestic and commercial fuel oil.

17 easy ways towards a 50% GASOLINE SAVING

(Approved by Automobile Experts)

Reduce driving speed from 60 to 40 on the open road.

Avoid jack-rabbit starts.

Avoid useless or non-essential driving.

Turn motor off when not in use, do not leave idling.

Don't race your engine; let it warm up slowly.

Don't strain your engine; change gears.

Keep carburetor cleaned and properly adjusted.

Tune up motor, timing, etc.

Keep spark plugs and valves clean.

Check cooling system; overheating wastes gasoline.

Maintain tires at right pressure.

Lubricate efficiently; worn engines waste gasoline.

Drive in groups to and from work, using cars alternate days.

For golf, picnics and other outings, use one car instead of four.

Take those short shopping trips ON FOOT and carry parcels home.

Walk to and from the movies.

Boat owners, too, can help by reducing speed.

Your regular service station man will gladly explain these and other ways of saving gasoline. Consult him.

THE GOLDEN SANDS RIDDLE

By Alexander Campbell

What the Story has Revealed

Peter Crosby, taking a seaside holiday at Marathon, South Africa's premier resort, meets Lucy Carr, and falls deeply in love with her.

Lucy is more interested in him than she would admit. But to Peter the whole affair seems hopeless because the Carrs are notoriously wealthy and he (Peter) has only the small income of a young man learning his profession.

Peter's dilemma is apparent to many people. One Mr. MONTE, a rather rough diamond from Johannesburg, affects to take an interest in him, and tells him he can make a fortune over-night by buying shares known as Golden Deeps. Monte is willing to lend him £1,000 to make the gamble.

CHAPTER III

TROUBLE-AND MR. XOSA

The manager of the Orient Hotel was small and plump. His name was Same Orion, and he was the proud possessor of slim white hands, that performed the most graceful and placating gesture. The hands were busy now, but Sir John Carr eyed them without favour.

There was a frown on his brow, and he nibbled his white moustache. "You say they have the fellow locked up?" he jerked. "That's all very well; but where's my note-case?"

Mr. Orion looked sorrowful. His round cherubic face creased into melancholy pink folds. "These natives are very cunning, Sir John; cunning rascals. Of course he'd have the sense to get rid of it almost immediately; probably passed it on to some confederate. But you say there was not much money in the case? So, after all—"

Sir John struggled impatiently. "I've told you all that before—you and the police. It isn't the value. But the case happened to be a gift from my daughter, and I want it back if possible."

Mr. Orion nodded understandingly. "A gift. Naturally you wish to have it returned. But we are doing all we can Sir John, I assure you."

"We have never had such an event happen at the Orient before. I pick the servants myself. Very, very carefully. We had had this man for a number of years. He seemed to me to be quite honest. These things are very distressing. But I assure you—"

Sir John got up. "Oh, well, suppose there's nothing more to be done. If the police get anything, let me know. I—"

"Good afternoon," said a soft voice.

They had had the room to themselves. Now a plump, apologetic figure blinked mildly at them. He appeared to have materialized from nowhere. Sir John Carr saw a round black face, and brown eyes behind spectacles; black hands resting meekly on the head of a black stick.

Mr. Orion bounded from this chair. "Confound your impudence!" he stormed who the devil are you?"

"Mr. Xosa," said the other meekly. "That is my name. You are the manager—So sorry to trouble you. I have come about my brother."

"And what should I know about your brother?" demanded Mr. Orion sharply.

"He works here."

"Good heavens, am I supposed to know every damned nigger who works in the hotel?" Mr. Orion gestured his graceful hand in a wave of despair.

"Well, you said you picked them all yourself," said Sir John. He was surveying the intruder with a thoughtful frown.

Mr. Orion ignored the thrust. He turned to Sir John with an appealing shrug and murmured: "I hope you will forgive this—an unfortunate incident! I'll soon set him about his business."

He turned to the intruder. "Get out of here at once. If you want to make any enquiries, you'll find the servants' entrance at the back of the building." To Sir John he murmured: "Don't know how the fellow managed to get into the main part of the hotel."

Mr. Xosa did not move. His hands still rested on the head of his stick. His voice was very meek. He said: "My brother, they tell me, has been arrested."

Light dawned on Mr. Orion. "So that's your brother?" he raged. He turned on Mr. Xosa, the aspect of a stalking lion. "That dirty, ungrateful, thieving dog! And you have the impudence—By jove, I'll get the police on to you!"

"The hunter goes to the lion, rather than that the lion should come after him," said Mr. Xosa. He coughed apologetically. "I shall go to the police. They have my brother in their care?"

Before Mr. Orion could reply, he went on: "My brother is no thief. There is no evil in his heart. Do berries and weeds spring from the same tree? I am a snare of thieves, and I know my brother. He is a good man. You have in your employ one Trickey Charlie?"

Mr. Orion nodded understandingly. "A gift. Naturally you wish to have it returned. But we are doing all we can Sir John, I assure you."

"Good afternoon," said a soft voice.

Mr. Orion stared. Trickey Charlie. There's a night porter caller Trickey Charlie—

Mr. Xosa nodded. "A cunning picker of locks and pockets," he said pleasantly. "He is known to me, and to the police in Johannesburg, though not, I think, to the police here. I go now to see my brother. I thank you, kind sirs." He bowed low. "Good afternoon."

The door was closing softly behind him before they realised he was gone.

Mr. Orion blinked. I'm sorry, Sir John; a bit soft in the head, probably—

"I," said Sir John grimly, "should investigate Mr. Trickey Charlie. Good afternoon."

Mr. Orion sank back in his cushioned chair and regarded his graceful white hands. These pestilential guests, and their finicky whims! A man worth millions, bothering his head over a note-case that he could buy in any fancy goods shop! Mr. Orion shrugged, and drew an ivory telephone towards him on its cradle. He had more important things to do, he told himself austere, than hunt for missing note-cases.

CHAPTER IV

MORNING AFTER

Peter Crosby woke from a fantastic dream in which a big man with a diamond on his little finger chased him down long unending corridors.

He smiled; and then memory leaped up.

He recalled Mr. Monte's parting gesture, and the heap of banknotes lying where they had been carelessly flung between the two glasses on the table.

It seemed too remote, incredible; and yet it had actually happened.

When Mr. Monte had gone, he had remained staring at the notes in a dazed fashion. Then he had grabbed them up, stuffed them in his pocket, and rushed out, almost knocking over a waiter who got in his path.

"Hey!" he yelled. "Hey! Come back!"

But Mr. Monte had gone.

Peter's first impulse had been to go to the Orient Hotel. The only thing that had deterred him was the thought that he might encounter Lucy Carr. In his excited frame of mind, he would not know what to say to her; and if he told her the story, she might think he had gone crazy.

He had compromised by telephoning the hotel, and asking for Mr. Monte. He was informed that Mr. Monte had gone out, and had not yet returned. He had asked the hotel to tell Mr. Monte to ring him as soon as he got in. Then he had gone into the room to await the call.

He unlocked his door, and took out the notes. They looked genuine. He counted them. He had suddenly become the owner of a thousand pounds. He paced his room restlessly, but no call came from Mr. Monte. An hour passed, and in that time he had a chance to think of many things.

Supposing—he could not put the thought from him—supposing Mr. Monte's tips were genuine? He had heard of such things. In this country of gold, men became millionaires and paupers over night. Suppose these shares did go up? Suppose they doubled their value? He would then be the richer by a thousand pounds, after he had paid back his strange benefactor's loan."

A thousand pounds would give him enough capital at least to make a start with these experiments that he had long planned on paper, a beginning with that new device which might cut down the costs of gold-mining.

If he did not seize this chance, he might struggle for years, earning a fairly decent salary, but with his talents gradually going to waste.

What were the shares? Golden Deeps. He was a mining engineer, not a financier. He had heard of Golden Deeps. Hadn't there been a sudden fall in their value years before? Yes; he had it now.

All gold-mining ventures are highly speculative. Heavy losses almost cancel out sudden rewards. Like many another venture, Golden Deeps had started off with rich prospects—an easily worked reef at little depth, and an apparently rich ore. Then, quite suddenly, the vein had petered out. They had been comatose for years.

If then there had been a fresh find, changing the whole situation of the mine, Monte's story became less fantastic. If his information were correct, then his gesture could be partly understood. For he would have nothing to lose. Provided Peter were honest, he was sure of getting his money back. And besides, he looked like the sort of man who had money to burn, and would enjoy making an impulsive, quixotic gesture—especially when it would cost him nothing.

Peter came to a sudden decision. He glanced at his watch. Then he went downstairs and rang up the Orient Hotel.

Mr. Monte, he was told, had not yet returned. He thought of asking for Sir John Carr. Monte had said he was a friend of the family. But said it was difficult to get to the diamond with the urbane Sir John and Lucy's father might ask questions that it would be difficult to answer.

He spun the dial again instead, and when he got the exchange, asked for a trunk call to Morton and Downey's offices, Johannesburg.

Ten minutes later a perspiring young man put down the phone and wiped his brow. "Phew!" he said.

The name of Monte had worked magic. Without raising the slightest difficulty, and without asking a single question, Messrs. Morton and Downey had agreed to purchase £1,000 worth of Golden Deeps shares on behalf of Mr. Peter Crosby.

Peter, sitting up in bed, remembered these things; and he suddenly leaped out from the sheets. Idiot! The paper would tell him the best—or the worst.

The newspaper, even now, was peeping a corner under his bedroom door. With trembling fingers he pulled it towards him, and eagerly turned the pages. The news came up and hit him in heavy, leaded type.

He sat down on the bed and, with some difficulty, lit a cigarette.

Then he read carefully through the long message.

As he read, he realised that the thing exceeded his wildest dreams. He had been toying with the idea of making a thousand pounds! He laughed shakily.

The Golden Deep engineers had struck one of the richest deposits of ore in the century, the paper stated. The Rand had once again made history. Lucky shareholders who had gone to bed the previous night, the owners of worthless share certificates, had awakened to find themselves rich. The value of Golden Deeps had soared within a few hours to ten times their value.

Mr. Monte's thousands had multiplied ten-fold. Peter was now the richer by ten thousand pounds.

He laid the paper aside, and dressed slowly and carefully—chiefly as an exercise of self-control. Then he sought Messrs. Morton and Downey on the phone. He got through after little delay.

Mr. Peter Crosby speaking," he said, and was aware that he was breathless. "About these shares—"

"Ah, yes, Mr. Crosby," said a pleasant voice. "A thousand pounds, wasn't it? Congratulations. Now sir, do you want to hang on to the shares, or find a client—"

Self? If you desire to sell, we can easily Peter hesitated, but only for a fraction of time. He was an engineer, not a gambler. What had collapsed like a pricked bubble once might do so again.

"Sell," he said promptly.

"Very good, Mr. Crosby," said the voice.

Ignoring breakfast, Peter went out into the sunshine. His first duty was clear. He must seek out Mr. Monte.

CHAPTER V

LOVE WITHOUT PURSUIT

"Come on," said Terence Pardy to Lucy Carr. "Plenty time yet before you meet your swain. Let's go down to the beach."

Lucy closed the book she was reading, and nodded.

"All right Terry." She stood up and stretched herself, and Terence watched her admiringly. "It's a lovely morning. Let's go."

Terence Pardy shook his dark hood "And a lovely lady. I almost begin to understand why the lads heart goes wibble-wobble."

Lucy smiled. "Honestly, Terry, has your heart never gone wibble-wobble over anyone at all?"

The young man shook his head.

There was a cough, and Terence half turned. Francis Gould, Sir John Carr's secretary, stood in the doorway. His eyes were masked behind his thick spectacles. His gaunt, dark face frowned at them. He spoke directly to the girl, ignoring Terry.

"Miss Carr—have you seen Sir John?"

"I think he went to see the manager again—about his lost note-case, you know. I haven't seen him since."

Gould nodded, and coughed again. "He is not with the manager. He must have gone out. Thank you."

His dark face vanished from the threshold.

Not exactly the ray of sunshine about the home, that chap," observed Terence, as they made their way out of the hotel.

"We can't all be as carefree as you," retorted Lucy. "Mr. Gould has to work for his living—and he works very hard, too. He's an excellent secretary."

"I know," sighed Terry. "Has all the statistics that were ever printed at his finger-tips. I suppose it's living with these figures that make him sad. When he discovers that the percentage of crushed ore has fallen from 54.976 to 54.907, I understand it clouds his whole day."

Lucy smiled. Terry was an amusing companion. He prattled on. Being fond of the sound of his own voice, he was also restful. And, as he had just frankly admitted, women held few charms for him. He treated them as equals, and would never pursue. This made him an even more restful companion for the daughter of a millionaire who was very seldom free from pursuit.

Not that Lucy objected to being admired, but she preferred to be admired for herself rather than for her father's millions.

They made their way out into the brilliant sunshine and along the promenade. Below them, the Indian Ocean stretched blue and inviting to the horizon. The tawny sands were dotted with multi-coloured sun umbrellas, and bathers splashed in the surf.

She was silent, deep in thought. He challenged her, but she evaded the point.

Terry laughed. "Would you think of giving me three guesses?" He looked good-humouredly down at her flushed face. "You were thinking of a man whose first name is Peter."

"Correct," said Lucy, "and he's going to run away."

"Because you're an heiress?"

"Yes."

"Well, I don't blame the chap. I take it he isn't a millionaire in disguise, or even a moderately rich playboy, like me. What else can he do?"

"But it's so silly—so old-fashioned! Just because 'm rich!'"

"Four little rich girls!" said Terry, half-mocking.

"Sometimes I detest you!"

The banter fled from his handsome face, leaving it sober. "Seriously, I didn't realise—you care for him that much?"

"I—I've only known him a little while. I think so."

"Oh!" said Terence Pardy. Absently, he flicked a stone with his shoe. "Lucy?"

"Yes?"

"I suppose you know—or perhaps you didn't—that your father—I mean the whole thing's perfectly absurd—but since I blew into your lives six months ago from Rhodesia, your father seems to have taken quite a fancy to me. I mean, well—"

"I understand," said Lucy, smiling. "I had noticed some symptoms. You mean, he thinks that since we're both a moneyed couple, an alliance would be just the thing?"

Terry looked uncomfortable. "Well—more or less."

"If that's what's in his mind, he's been jolly decent about Peter."

"Yes," said Terence thoughtfully. "But your father's not an ogre. If I read your father right, I'm sure he would never prevent you following—what's the absurd phrase?—your heart's desire. If it turned out to be really your heart's desire. Of course, he'd probably want to know more about the chap—"

"There's nothing wrong with Peter," said Lucy defiantly.

"I wasn't suggesting that."

Lucy was silent, again, and Terry did not break into her thoughts. They went down the steps to the beach.

"And what does the rich play-boy think of the idea?" she asked after a while, giving him a half-mischvous smile.

"You're an embarrassing wench sometimes," said Terry warmly.

"The Carrs have always been noted for their bluntness, I'm afraid."

"Well," said Terry, with a laugh. "I've told you I'm a hardened bachelor—"

"I'm so glad you take it that way," said Lucy softly.

"—but if there ever was a girl—I mean if I ever did entertain any such idea—I think you would be she, Lucy!"

"Oh!"

"And now that I've got that guilty secret off my chest," said Terry with a laugh, "let's forget the whole thing. I mean, it's probably just a passing notion. Due to the sunshine, or something. I get them occasionally, and spend months thereafter shuddering at my narrow escape. So that's all right."

The girl touched his hand. "Thanks, Terry," she said. She tried to speak as lightly as he, deliberately ignoring the hurt in his eyes, because she guessed that he wanted her to. Let's stroll along the beach."

"Averting our eyes as best we may from these baker bodies," said Terence, with a strong shudder. Sun-work shipping can be carried too far. Look at that girl!" "Or that man!" he added despairingly.

Lucy laughed. "Well, they came to Marathon to get the sunshine."

"They're certainly getting it!" said Terry fervently.

They picked their way between the loungers. The sands were pleasantly warm. Idly Lucy watched the breakers swell and roll inwards to froth in creamy lace on the beach. A man and a girl came shorewards on surf-boards. The girl capsized and fell under a wave. The man laughed, let his board go and dived to her rescue.

"Hello!" said Terence suddenly. He was starting straight ahead. At this part of the beach the crowd was thinner. Under a striped umbrella a man sat motionless, apart from the others. He was leaning against the pole of his umbrella, his back to them. He seemed to have fallen asleep, for his head had fallen on his chest, and his broad-brimmed white hat was pulled down on his nose. But there was no mistaking that broad, almost brutal back.

"It's Mr. Monte, isn't it?" asked Lucy.

"The man at our hotel. They call him the mysterious Mr. Monte. He seems to have plenty of money though."

"In these hard times," said Terry lightly, "that's the mystery I've spoken to the chap once or twice. I imagine he's a rough diamond who has struck it rich. Quite a decent lad, though. Would you excuse me? I want to have a word with him. He very kindly loaned me a quid the other night. We were playing a modest game of cards and I found myself short."

He strode forward to the seated figure, and called: "Mr. Monte."

The figure beneath the umbrella did not move.

Terence impatiently extended a hand to tap him on the shoulder, and Lucy had a sudden presentiment which made her stand still.

Terence's hand descended on the man's shoulder. He did not turn his head; but, very slowly, his whole body moved forward under the impact. It went down and fell and rolled over, in a set piece, as if made of wood.

As he fell, they saw what they had not seen before, because the umbrella had hidden it. The broad back of the man's white linen jacket gleamed in the sun like starched lace; and in the middle of the shining white expanse was the hilt of a knife.
